BOLD EXPLOIT OF A GUERRILLA BAND.

A Train on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Captured.

The Passengers Robbed of Money and Jewelry.

No Prisoners Taken by the Rebels and the Train Not Injured.

BALTIMORE, Saturday, Feb. 13.

The Sun of this morning gives the following particulars:

"The express passenger train which left Camden-street depot on Thursday night for Wheeling and intermediate points, was captured by a company of Confederates when near Kearneysville Depot, about eight miles west of Harper's Ferry.

It appears a switch had been turned, and the usual signal, the waving of a lighted lamp, made by the raiders, as the train approached. The signal caused the engineer to stop the engine. The train was then surrounded by the raiders, and a number of armed men entered the cars. The passengers, among whom, of course, there was a great consternation, were more or less mulcted in the shape of ransom. Some produced greenbacks, others watches, while several reluctantly gave diamonds, rings or breastpins as equivalents for their personal liberty.

We are informed by one of the sufferers who returned to this city by Express train, that reached here from Wheeling at noon yesterday, that the aggregate amount of money taken from passengers was not less than $30,000, while the value of the jewelry was also considered large.

Conductor PERRY, who had charge of the train, it was stated, was compelled to hand over a check for $4,500, the property of the Railroad Company. This, however, will prove valueless. The fact of the check confiscation was denied yesterday.

A number of the passengers who arrived here yesterday in the Express train, had interviews with some of the passengers, and their statements widely differed, both as to the amount of money, &c., confiscated, and the character of the raiders. Of the former, the amount ranged from $1,000 to $3,000, while of the latter, some were certain that they were persons residing in the neighborhood, while another party, a well-known resident of this city, declared that he conversed with one of the mulcted passengers who stated to him that Maj. HARVEY GILMER, of the Confederate Cavalry, was in command of the expedition, that he knew and conversed with him. No one was injured, nor was there the least disposition on the part of the raiders to take any prisoners. Several members of the Maryland State Legislature, delegates from the Western Counties, were among the passengers, but on the occasion are represented to have been quite taciturn as to their official positions. Their greenbacks and watches are said to have formed a part of their booty. It was also stated that several Federal officers and soldiers were on the train, but fared no worse than their fellow-passengers. After the raiders accomplished their purpose, they ran the locomotive and tender off the track, causing some injury to the engine. They then left the train, going through the fields, in the direction of Smithfield, a small village in Jefferson County, Va.

Although a company of Federal troops were stationed within a short distance of the point where the train was stopped, none of the passengers or employes of the road were enabled to get any information to them, until all hope of capturing the raiders had vanished. The scene inside the train after the affair, as stated by an eye-witness, was mournfully ridiculous. As certain of the passengers would bring forth from a hiding place various amounts of greenbacks, or other valuables, which they saved from confiscation, congratulations and merriment would ensue, which, however, was, from time to time, well balanced by imprecations and mournful announcements of loss on the part of others. The whole affair, indeed, is a strange and novel one. The first time since the war. It is alleged that a passenger train has been captured and destroyed. As to who the raiders really were, so many various opinions have been expressed, that nothing definite can yet be stated on that score. It was thought by some that it was done by a local predatory band organized for the purpose of plundering at every opportunity. The fact that no prisoners were taken off are regarded as arguing rather strongly that they were not regular Confederates.

A report was in circulation yesterday that Adam's Express has sustained some loss, which was, during the evening, denied by Mr. IRISH, Superintendent of the company, who alleged that in the affair the company had lost neither goods nor funds. The line of the railroad where the raid took place is not in the department under Gen. LOCKWOOD, but in the department under the command of Gen. KELLEY. As regards the injured engine and tender, the railroad employes, with their usual energy, repaired all damages in about three hours, and the detained train with its mulcted passengers arrived in Cumberland yesterday morning almost on time. [All the passenger and freight trains were running as usual yesterday afternoon, and it was announced that a large Federal cavalry force had been placed all along the line of the road, while a similar force had been sent out in search of the raiders."

ANOTHER DISPATCH.

BALTIMORE, Saturday, Feb. 13.

It is now very strongly suspected that the attack upon the express train on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, ten miles east of Martinsburgh, the other night, an account of which has been telegraphed, was by a gang of robbers and cut-throats from the loyal States, Penitentiary birds and probably deserting Federal soldiers, who had no connection with the rebels. The robbery of the affrighted passengers was very general; not one of them escaped losing something. One man is said to have lost over 4,000 dollars in greenbacks. The passengers made no resistance, supposing they were surrounded by an overwhelming force of rebels. A good many of them threw their watches, jewels and money away, some of which have since been found. No insult was offered to the ladies, and no attempt to make any one a prisoner. Neither was there any effort to burn or destroy the train. The deed was committed almost in sight of quite a strong Federal encampment. All these things look very much as if the offending party was a band of robbers belonging to our own side. Had they been "Confederates," the strong probability is that efforts would have been made to capture all prisoners, as they did not know but President LINCOLN or some other distinguished dignitary might have been aboard. No clue has yet been had to the perpetrators, or guerrillas, as they are called.

The cars are now running regularly and undisturbed over the road.

[We give the above dispatch as it comes, with the remark that it has a very strong "Confederate" squint. The speculations of the telegrapher at Baltimore are no more likely to be correct than those of other people.—ED. TIMES.]

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

OUR WASHINGTON CORRESPONDENCE

The Situation in Tennessee—The Probabilities—The Army of the Potomac.

WASHINGTON, Monday, Feb. 8, 1864.

I have an impression, amounting almost to positive belief, that some time in the latter part of November, or early in December last past, President LINCOLN called on the people to give thanks to the Almighty for the expulsion of the rebels from Eastern Tennessee, as well as for the masterly achievements under GRANT in and about Chattanooga. Nevertheless, according to the last accounts, LONGSTREET, with something like 25,000 men, seems to have remained in Eastern Tennessee. He appears not only not disposed to go just at present, but to advance further into the "Switzerland of America." There appears, therefore, to have been a slight mistake, some prematurity in the case. How came it about? This, doubtless, is a question which thousands of persons have asked; and I perceive that certain of the Copperhead press have undertaken to disparage Gen. GRANT in connection with it. I believe I can throw a little light on the subject.

The leading idea in the masterly plan which drove BRAGG from his strong position on Lookout Mountain and Missionary Ridge—defeated and drove his army in panic as far as Ringgold—was to relieve BURNSIDE, then sorely pressed at Knoxville, and to cut off LONGSTREET from BRAGG, and drive him from Eastern Tennessee, (if he got away at all,) through the upper gaps, into Virginia and North Carolina. The pursuit of BRAGG ceased at Ringgold, and GRANT ordered SHERMAN, with the Fifteenth Corps—(the Osterhaus Division belonging to it, which had been temporarily detached under HOOKER, being replaced by Gen. JEFF. C. DAVIS' Division of the Fourteenth Corps, Army of the Cumberland)—to proceed at once and with all possible dispatch toward Knoxville, and "drive LONGSTREET from Eastern Tennessee." Two divisions of the Fourth Corps (GRANGER'S) of THOMAS' command, were at the same time ordered to proceed to the same quarter. This gave SHERMAN, independent of BURNSIDE'S beseiged force, a force of about 30,000 men. BURNSIDE had been ordered, on the approach of LONGSTREET, to fall back from the neighborhood of Loudon, where he then was, to some fortified position he could hold, and at the same time keep open a route communicating with Memphis, thus "luring the enemy as far as possible away" from BRAGG and his base. This is not an uninteresting item in the history of the operations in Eastern Tennessee. It went forth that BURNSIDE was crushed back by LONGSTREET, and was compelled to take refuge in Knoxville, when it was only a part of a strategic movement that gave the Federal forces time and position, and consummated the original purpose of preventing entirely a junction of LONGSTREET'S and BRAGG'S forces. While LONGSTREET was besieging BURNSIDE in Knoxville, SHERMAN, with the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Corps was marching, not rapidly, but steadily toward that place. On his approach, LONGSTREET raised the siege and made off toward the gaps, as if to make good his exit the only way possible.

Here commences a series of something, if they were not mistakes, I leave the reader to determine what they were. BURNSIDE ranked SHERMAN, and to him SHERMAN reported. There was no rivalry or improper feeling on that point, that is known. SHERMAN said his troops had marched a long distance, and were in no condition to pursue. BURNSIDE said his troops had just emerged from a severe siege, and were no better off, but, with the magnanimity of his nature, said that if he could have a part of SHERMAN'S men he would follow LONGSTREET; and SHERMAN thereupon gave him DAVIS' Division, (not really a part of his own force,) and with the Fifteenth Corps countermarched one hundred and ten miles to Chattanooga, and thence some thirty miles more to Bridgeport. The distance to where LONGSTREET could have been reached, and must have been beaten or compelled to leave actually, [was considerably less. It is scarcely probable that SHERMAN'S men would have been in a worse plight had they gone forward than they were at the end of their somewhat rapid countermarch; though it is entirely true that as to subsistence and clothing they would not have been as well off, though as well off in that and every other respect as BURNSIDE'S and GRANGER'S troops—to the latter of which DAVIS' Division had been added.

BURNSIDE, with a limited force, marched out of Knoxville, in the direction of LONGSTREET, while SHERMAN, with a nearly or equal force, marched in the contrary direction, a much further distance, because, as he said, his men were too weary to pursue. Both Generals undoubtedly supposed that LONGSTREET was really making his way out of Eastern Tennessee, and that whether pursued or not he could go. In that they made a mistake, however, as the sequel showed. And here we arrive at another point, or complication, in the matter. BURNSIDE had some time before applied to be relieved, in consequence of a difference with Gen. HALLECK. FOSTER had for some time been trying to relieve him, and that General now appeared and took command of the department, and BURNSIDE left, but in the full belief that LONGSTREET was doing or had already done the same thing. But the wary rebel General, instead of doing that, went to intrenching. He had found a place where, with a little digging, he would be master of the situation. He had doubtless found out that SHERMAN had countermarched, and that there was no danger for him. He perceived that he was expected to go any way, of his own accord, but since there was now no occasion for doing so, he concluded he would not. Furthermore, he had got possession of a very considerable quantity of supplies which BURNSIDE had some time before collected for his own troops; and SHERMAN being gone, no superior force being in front of him, he found his situation to be as comfortable as could be expected, if not all that could be desired. It is scarcely probable that Gen. FOSTER, in concluding it would be remiss to attack LONGSTREET, misjudged. At no time was LONGSTREET'S retreat precipitate. BURNSIDE had already reported to Gen. GRANT at Chattanooga that he "was retiring with great deliberation." Still, that he would go, no one doubted, and it is presumed that Gen GRANT, having given the order to "drive LONGSTREET from Eastern Tennessee," and provided an adequate force, felt at liberty to turn his attention to matters in another direction, which gave him rest neither night nor day. I will not undertake to say what he thought when he found that SHERMAN—somewhat after the fashion of the KING who, with thirty thousand men, marched up the hill and then marched down again—had come back, while LONGSTREET was yet in Eastern Tennessee, but it is fair to presume that he hoped it would be well; and, as he placed great confidence in Gen. SHERMAN, he no doubt believed it would be.

But it was not; and was not, precisely for the reasons I have related; and precisely for the same reasons the subsequent events, the present situation of affairs in Eastern Tennessee, have their origin.

But I am not looking for disaster in that quarter, although LONGSTREET may have been considerably reinforced. GRANT has been neither idle nor indifferent, even though he has been a day or two in St. Louis to see a sick child. I believe it will turn out that there is a shot in the locker not known to everybody. That he has not been able to realize everything he desired in the management of the Eastern Tennessee complication, I am certain. Gen. FOSTER, some four weeks since, on account of ill health, asked to be relieved. Gen. GRANT, though not underrating Gen. FOSTER'S capabilities, perceived the desirableness of having a well General there, and made a suggestion, which, if acceded to, would have relieved him of all anxiety in the premises. There were doubtless adequate reasons why the suggestion was not acceded to.

That Gen. GRANT has really no very great anxiety about Eastern Tennessee, though, for the reasons I have narrated, he has experienced a world of perplexity, is apparent from the fact that he has been steadily preparing a great enterprise in another direction. That enterprise would have been developed more than a month ago but for this Eastern Tennessee boggle. That it is not given up, though much delayed, and is about to go off, is proof that adequate provision has been made for meeting LONGSTREET, or it may be a part of that provision. I think it will so turn out.

As for JOHNSTON, with BRAGG'S old army, he will before long find out that he has all he can attend to, perhaps in a quarter he has not been expecting, if he has not already found it out; and precisely for the same causes Longstreet may soon find his position materially changed. Mr. LINCOLN tells a good, though not always repeatable story as to the benefits of "counter irritation," that illustrates the idea and the situation which I do not doubt will before long be developed.

A few words about the Army of the Potomac and future movements: Gen. GRANT, and I suppose every other General who thinks at all, warmly favors the policy of concerted action, as far as possible, under one policy, as if under one mind, of all the armies in the ensuing operations. He, therefore, is not indifferent to the Army of the Potomac, which, while it has very much the quality of inertness, still, like the weight on the beam, causes it to go up or go down, according as it is moved one way or the other. It is an important element for that if for no other reason. But I believe that Gen. GRANT thinks that the Army of the Potomac has performed that office long enough, and that by doing something else, it can very materially contribute to the success of plans he has proposed and a part of which he will undertake to execute. Gen. GRANT does not agree with Gen. HALLECK that the overland route is the only one to Richmond. I believe he has expressed definite ideas on that point; and I believe furthermore, he has ventured to suggest the name of a General to be placed in command of the army when the next change takes place. It gives me great pleasure, (as no doubt in military circles at least great satisfaction will be experienced at the consummation,) to believe that there is a likelihood that the suggestion will be adopted. Certain rumors in this connection, not only as to plans and routes but as to men, which have recently found their way into print, have, I believe, have a better foundation than rumors generally. They are at least consistent with what are understood to be Gen. GRANT'S suggestions.

The "cold scald" which has been experienced lately in different parts of Gen. BUTLER'S Department, would seem to conflict with the idea that he is as really great in military movements as he confessedly is in the management of affairs in which his executive and diplomatic qualities are brought out. It is undoubtedly a fact that it is in that direction he can serve the country best, and as hardly any other man in it can. It is no discredit to him, however, that he aspires, as it is understood he does, to distinction in the field. There is some probability—at least much propriety—in the suggestion that the chivalrous Gen. HANCOCK will take the management of affairs in the old Department of North Carolina, where, just now, there is an unseemly snarl. His appointment to that position would, however, deprive the reorganized Potomac Army of one of its best Corps Commanders.

PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS.

SENATE.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Feb. 13.

OFFICERS DRAWING COMMUTATION.

A report of the Secretary of War was received, in answer to a resolution relative to officers' commutation for quarters and fuel. It shows that there are three hundred and eighty-seven officers here drawing such commutation, namely: Nine Major-Generals, eighteen Brigadier-Generals, thirty-four Colonels, eighteen Lieutenant-Colonels, twenty-four Majors, one hundred and twenty-six Captains, forty-three Lieutenants, twenty-four Surgeons, twelve Assistant-Surgeons, and seventy-nine Paymasters.

IDAHO GOLD MINES.

Mr. HOWE, of Wisconsin, (Union,) presented a memorial from the Milwaukie Chamber of Commerce, representing that within a few months more than twenty-five millions of dollars have been mined in Idaho, and are waiting egress, and asking aid in the construction of a wagon road, with military protection, through Central Minnesota. Referred.

VOTERS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. HARLAN, of Iowa, (Union,) introduced a bill for the registration of voters in Washington City. Referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

THE PAY OF SOLDIERS.

On motion of Mr. WILSON, of Massachusetts, (Union,) the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill equalizing the pay of United States soldiers.

Mr. CONNESS, of California, (Union,) withdrew his amendment confining the benefits to those in the service at the time of the passage of the act.

Mr. SUMNER of Massachusetts, (Union,) offered an amendment providing that in cases where the Secretary of War shall be satisfied that persons of color have been mustered into the service at the rate of thirteen dollars per month, they shall be paid at that rate for previous services.

Mr. GRIMES, of Iowa, (Union,) hoped that the Senator would withdraw his proposition, and that from this time forward every soldier, whatever might be his color, would receive the same pay; if any abuses or acts of injustice should arise, they could be remedied by subsequent legislation. He hoped the bill might be allowed to stand on its merits without making it retrospective.

Mr. HOWE concurred with Mr. GRIMES.

Mr. WILSON moved to strike out the clause in the bill of the committee giving colored troops the same pay, &c., except bounty, during the whole time they have been in the service, and insert "after the first day of January, 1864.

Mr. SUMNER would not withdraw his amendment without explaining that its provisions would only apply to a few regiments, and, therefore, there would be no great draft upon the treasury. He did not think that the United States could afford at this time to do injustice to the colored troops.

Mr. FESSENDEN, of Maine, (Union,) here claimed the floor, and from the Finance Committee reported certain amendments to the House Deficiency Bill. He asked that they lie over until Monday.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Maryland, (Union,) in reply to Mr. SUMNER, said: If the black men of Maryland were as good as the black men enlisted elsewhere, why make exceptions? They were all enlisted under the same law. If justice were done according to the views of the Senator from Massachusetts, some $800,000 would be taken from the Treasury, or as he understood it, about $1,500,000. All should be paid alike. Why did not Massachusetts pay these troops herself?

Mr. FESSENDEN said he understood the pay had been offered, but the colored troops refused to receive it.

Mr. WILSON explained the circumstances under which the colored troops from Massachusetts had refused to receive their pay. They held the Government to the pledges made to them, and wanted the full pay of $13 per month, or asked to be discharged from the service.

Mr. JOHNSON said, then they were colored gentlemen of extraordinary sensibilities.

Mr. GRIMES said that from the very outset he and his [colleague (HARLAN) were in favor of putting negro troops on an equality with the whites. He was on the record in this respect, before the senator from Massachusetts (SUMNER.)

Mr. SUMNER said, that in a public speech he had said, that while he was in favor of carrying the war into Africa, he was more in favor of carrying the African into the war (laughter.)

Mr. GRIMES was not only in favor of carrying the African into the war, but for paying him $13 per month, and for placing him on a footing with other soldiers. If we were going back to pay these colored troops from Massachusetts, &c., why not pay those from Tennessee? He was informed there were some thirty regiments of these troops there. He thought there was trouble in the future to be apprehended from making the retrospective character of this bill indiscriminate. He sympathized with the gallant and patriotic young men of the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Massachusetts colored troops, but he could not help believing that it was on account of their action that the colored men of the South Carolina regiments refused to receive their pay.

Mr. COWAN, of Pennsylvania, (Union,) said. If we were going back for these colored men, he was also in favor of going back in favor of the white men, who were our earliest volunteers and had borne the heat and burden of the day. He was not in favor of overriding the statute to do justice to these negro troops until equal and exact justice had been done to the veteran white soldiers. When the country should be restored to its wonted prosperity we could do justice to all. Now it is exceedingly dangerous.

The amendment of Mr. WILSON was then adopted.

The amendment of Mr. DOOLITTLE, providing, that from the monthly pay of colored troops mustered into the service in insurrectionary districts, the sum of three dollars per month shall be reserved to reimburse the expenses incurred by the United States in feeding and clothing the widows, children and parents of deceased colored troops.

This was rejected after some debate.

Mr. CARLISLE, of West Virginia, (Union,) said that in the old days of peace, the negroes had holidays on every Saturday afternoon, and as all persons were equal under the law, he thought were now entitled to one. As half the afternoon has been spent in the service of the negro, he moved that the Senate adjourn. [Great laughter.]

At the instance of several Senators, Mr. CARLISLE, however, withdrew his motion.

Mr. SUMNER proposed a proviso that in all cases of past services of colored troops, where it shall appear to the satisfaction of the Secretary of War, from the actual papers of enlistment, that the troops were enlisted under the act of July, 1861, they shall be allowed the pay promised by that act.

This was rejected by yeas 16; nays 21.

Mr. COWAN offered a substitute for the bill as amended, "That from and after the passage of this act all soldiers of the United States of the same arm of the service shall receive like compensation."

Mr. COWAN supported his amendment at some length, claiming that the negro must be regarded as a citizen under the Constitution, as he received the protection of the laws.

Mr. SAULSBURY, of Delaware, (Dem.,) said if that was the basis of the Senator's (COWAN'S) substitute, it was abhorrent to his (SAULSBURY'S) views, and he would not support it. The old-fashioned term was "Negro"—now they were "colored citizens."

Mr. HOWE would ask if the negroes were not "colored" in Delaware.

Mr. SAULSBURY doubted if they were as "colored" in Delaware as they were in some other places. He would never consent to equality, either political or social, with the negro.

Mr. COWAN asserted that the negro had a legal status under the Constitution which protected him.

Pending action on the substitute of Mr. COWAN, the Senate adjourned.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

OUR ALBANY CORRESPONDENCE.

ALBANY, Saturday, Feb. 1864.

The political contest which has so excited the Senate for a few days past was to-day transferred to the floor of the Assembly.

In discussing the Appropriation Bill, a debate occurred in reference to the item of two hundred thousand dollars for the expenses of the National Guard of this State. Mr. CROOKS, of Kings, said that while this sum seemed entirely inadequate, it was yet better than not to devote anything for the defence of the State, and a less sum than here proposed would not be sufficient to maintain even the skeleton of a militia organization. Mr. ALVORD thought differently. He believed this organization was of no real worth to the State. The fighting was not done by the so-called National Guard. He moved to make the appropriation only $50,000, and to apply it to paying the staff-officers of the Governor, and such expenses as were directly connected with such officers. If there was any militia organization, it should be the old organization of all the militia. He favored a return to the old plan. Mr. ANDRUS, of Franklin, moved to amend by making the appropriation $100,000, with a condition that no part of the sum should be used for a regimental fund. Upon these propositions being made, Mr. CROOK rose, and made a lengthy speech in favor of the militia organization, introducing political matters which had a bearing upon the subject. He was ready to return to the old militia system, but thought there was no reason to refuse to support the present system on that account. He believed that political considerations should not be brought in to decide this question. He could pardon the Governor for having made some mistakes in appointing wrong men to carry out the provisions of the law. It was best, in his view, to sustain the militia organization, which had been of great service in various exigences which he named. He proceeded to criticise with some effect an argument bearing upon this matter which had been advanced in a speech on the Governor's Message by Mr. CURTIS, of New-York. He understood the gentleman to declare that the riots were occasioned by a contest between the "masses and the classes." This idea he entirely repudiated. It would be quite safe to arm the masses, in his view, and they would take care of themselves in case of a riot if they were armed as militia. The old Robesperian idea of a fight between the masses and the classes was not the true theory of the riots by any means. He regretted that such an idea had been advanced.

Mr. CURTIS replied, explaining that he had been misunderstood.

Mr. CROOKE was positive that he had not misunderstood the gentleman from New-York.

Mr. ALVORD was glad the gentleman from New-York had declared that he was misunderstood, but would state that he, too, had understood him to intimate by his theory of the masses and the classes what his party would do as a dernier resort. Mr. ALVORD then spoke of the Militia Bill of 1862, and stated that the bill, as signed by the Governor, was not the bill which the Legislature supposed they had passed. He did not say that the bill had been changed in any respect, but it was a different law from that which the Legislature supposed they had passed.

Mr. WEAVER, of Oneida, replied to Mr. ALVORD with some bitterness, accusing him not only of repudiating a law which he had been influential in passing (law of '62,) but also of partiality in his ruling as Speaker, in a case which he specified, and which occurred a few days since. Mr. ALVORD replied, asserting the correctness of the ruling referred to, and denouncing the course that had been pursued in various cases which he instanced, in appointing men to high military positions in the State, who had no qualifications whatever for the positions they occupy.

The debate was on the whole spicy, political and personal; and as it was the first of the kind that has occurred in the House during the session, it was especially noteworthy. Of course, under such circumstances, no conclusion was reached in reference to the question under consideration.

In response to a resolution of inquiry, the Comptroller communicated to the Senate to-day the following important information in relation to the present condition of the appropriation for State bounties to volunteers: In 1863, $3,000,000 were appropriated for the payment of said bounties, and that appropriation is now entirely exhausted. From an estimate made, it appears that the soldiers enlisted under the call for 300,000 men, made by the President in October, require an appropriation of at least $3,000,000 more. The Comptroller remarks that while these enlistments were secured by local bounties, the act offering a State bounty of $150 to veterans and $75 to new recruits was in full force. It is supposed that the quota of this State, under the last call for 200,000, will be 40,000 men. If the State bounty shall be continued to these, a still further appropriation of $3,000,000 will be required. The money for State bounties paid thus far has been borrowed of the Commissioners of the Canal Fund on the Comptroller's bond, in anticipation of the tax authorized to be levied to pay them. A two-mill tax was authorized. A tax of 2 13-16, it is now estimated, will be required for bounties already paid. A 2½ mill tax will be required for the call of October, and a still further 2½ mill tax for the call for 200,000 men if the State bounty is continued. The Comptroller recommends an immediate tax, as it will be difficult to borrow the money upon reasonable terms, from the fact that State bonds will be taxed, while United States bonds, with which they will have to compete in the market, will not.

The Niagara Ship Canal Company Bill occupied the attention of the Assembly on Friday evening. After the bill had been gone through with and attempts made to introduce new names among the corporators, including the names of all those who had been stricken from the bill as Directors, the bill came before the House on the question of granting the Committee of the Whole leave to further consider the bill at some future time. Mr. HEALY, of Wyoming, moved to strike out the enacting clause. He expressed himself as quite ready to grant any personal favor to those who desired the passage of the bill, offering his coat, hat or boots if they desired all or any of them, but he stated that he could not favor the measure under consideration because that would be an injury to the interests of the State of New-York. He made a very effective speech against the scheme, showing that its practical operation would be to divert business from the Erie Canal, and thereby lessen the tolls on the canal as well as take away the business resulting from the Western trade from the City of New-York. Western products would go direct to Liverpool by way of Montreal.

The bill was left with this motion to strike out the enacting clause pending, and has not since been taken up.

A communication was here received from the Comptroller, informing the Senate that the fund for State bounties is exhausted.

The special order being the General Appropriation Bill, it was considered in Committee of the Whole.

Upon the item appropriating $200,000 to the militia, a debate sprung up taking a wide range. It went into the merits of the organization, the political complexion of the Governor's military appointments, and the faults of the National Guard Act of 1862.

The Speaker and Messrs. CROOKS, WEAVER and CURTIS participated in the discussion.

Mr. CURTIS introduced a bill for a railroad in Desbrosses and other streets in New-York.

STATE BOUNTY TO VOLUNTEERS.

Comptroller ROBINSON, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, calling for information in regard to bounties for volunteers, sent in the following communication:

STATE OF NEW-YORK, COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE, ALBANY, Feb. 13, 1864.

To the Hon. the Senate:

In complying with the request contained in your resolution, I have to inform the Senate that the act chapter 144 of the Laws of 1863, appropriated $3,000,000 for the payment of bounties to volunteers, and that the appropriation has to-day become entirely exhausted; and the payment of State bounties must therefore cease unless immediate provision for their continuance be made by the Legislature.

From an estimate which I have received from the Paymaster-General, I learn that the number of volunteers enlisted since the call of the President for 300,000 men, in October last, will be sufficient to require another appropriation of $3,000,000. These enlistments were mainly procured by means of large local bounties and the energetic efforts of the people; but the act offering a State bounty of $150 to veterans and $75 to new recruits, remained in full force, and the volunteers were assured that they "would receive the benefit of it, and the Paymaster-General is, consequently, paying it to them, the same as to those enlisted before the October call.

It will, of course, be for the Legislature to determine whether, after having legalized the local bounties, and authorized a continuance of them, the State bounty shall also be paid to volunteers under the new call for an additional 200,000 men. It is supposed that the quota of this State, under the last call, will be about 40,000 men. If the State bounty be paid to them, it will require a still further appropriation of $3,000,000. If this be ordered and provided for, it will make $9,000,000 paid and to be paid by and from the State Treasury, for bounties, during the past and present year; and, added to the $3,500,000 paid in 1862, will make $12,500,000. These large amounts paid by the several cities, towns and counties.

The bounty of 1863 provided for the levying of a two mill tax on so much thereof as the Comptroller might find necessary. However, upon consultation with the Paymaster-General previous to sending out the tax circulars on the 1st of October last, it was deemed safe and proper to limit the tax to one mill and 11-16, as it did not at that time appear probable that more than about two-thirds of the appropriation would be used. The subsequent unexpected call of the President, and the great and successful exertions made to procure volunteers, have rendered both the appropriation and the tax largely deficient.

In my annual report, I estimated the rate of tax for ordinary purposes for the next fiscal year at 2 13-16 mills upon each dollar of valuation. This embraced nothing for future bounties, nor for any extraordinary expenditure; and it will require an additional levy of 2½ mills to provide for the bounties already pledged; and still another 2½ mills if the State bounty shall be continued to volunteers under the new call.

This would place the whole taxation at the unprecedented rate of 7 1-16 mills even if the Legislature should abstain from every expenditure not absolutely necessary, and should observe the most rigid economy in all its appropriations.

The $3,000,000 paid under the act of 1863 has been borrowed from the Commissioners of the Canal Fund upon the Comptroller's bonds in anticipation of the tax. It will be necessary to borrow temporarily from some other source such further amounts as shall be appropriated in anticipation of any tax that may now be levied, as the money will be required immediately.

I beg leave earnestly to recommend that a tax be levied at once to cover whatever appropriations shall be made.

It would, in my judgment, be very unwise in the present condition of financial affairs to attempt to make loans to be paid at a distant day, and probably it would be impossible to do so at any reasonable rate, as our stocks would come in competition with those of the United States, which are exempt from taxation, and the interest on which is paid in coin.

Respectfully submitted.

LUCIUS ROBINSON, Comptroller.

Mr. JOHNSON, of St. Louis, Chairman of the committee to investigate into the military affairs of this State, made a lengthy and very elaborate report to the lower house of the Legislature yesterday.

The Memphis Bulletin publishes a card signed by 300 of the best citizens of that city, addressed to the people of Tennessee, upon the subject of the reorganization of the State, and reëstablishing relations with the National Government. It recommends immediate and unconditional emancipation as the best, truest policy and only alternative, and calls upon all to support the same by meeting at Memphis on the 22d instant.

THE PALMERSTON-O'KANE SCANDAL.

Correspondence of the Manchester Examiner.

LONDON, Tuesday, Jan. 26, 1864.

The Divorce Court was crowded this morning by members of the Bar and of the legal profession, amongst whom it had transpired that a motion was to be made in the great divorce case O'KANE vs. O'KANE and PALMERSTON. Under any circumstances, the public curiosity would have been vividly excited by the first appearance in court of this celebrated suit, but there was the more eagerness to hear what was said and done on this occasion as it was believed that it was the only opportunity we should have, at all events, so far as the noble corespondent's share in the matter. The latter idea was wrong, as will be seen, but still it prevailed, and, no doubt, had the effect I have mentioned. Before I notice what occurred, it may be interesting to state exactly the present position of the case, and the state of the pleadings. These did not come out very fully in the course of the proceedings to-day, but the following account may be relied upon as correct:

In Her Majesty's Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes.

In the matter of TIMOTHY JOSEPH O'KANE, of No. 21 Inverness road, Bayswater, in the County of Middlesex, gentleman, dated the 19th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1863.

Showeth, 1. That your petitioner, on the 2d of October, 1851, lawfully married to MARGARET MATILDA AUGUSTA HORNE, of No. 2 John-street, Sutton-street, Commercial road East, in the said County of Middlesex, spinster, at St. George's-in-the-East, in the said County of Middlesex.

2. That after his said marriage your petitioner lived and cohabited with his said wife, at No. 2 John-street, Sutton-street, Commercial road East aforesaid; at Gravesend, in the County of Kent; at Dingle, Killarney and Tralee, all in the County of Kerry, in Ireland; and at No. 26 Grove-place, Brompton, in the County of Middlesex; and that there was issue to the marriage, viz: one son and four daughters.

That on or about the 16th day of June, 1863, and at divers other days and times, at Cambridge House, No. 94 Piccadilly, in the said County of Middlesex, and at divers other places, the said MARGARET MATILDA AUGUSTA O'KANE committed adultery with one HENRY JOHN TEMPLE, Viscount PALMERSTON, K. G., First Lord of Her Majesty's Treasury.

Your petitioner therefore humbly prays that this honorable court will be pleased to decree and declare the said marriage of your petitioner and the said MARGARET MATILDA AUGUSTA O'KANE to be dissolved, and that your petitioner may have such other and further relief in the premises as to this honorable court may seem meet. And your petitioner will ever pray, &c.

TIMOTHY JOSEPH O'KANE.

The respondent, Mrs. O'KANE, answered this petition, on the 1st day of November, by a denial, both of the adultery and of the marriage. The noble corespondent did not answer, but instead of doing so—and as a preliminary step—he, on the 17th of November last, obtained in chambers an order that the petitioner should specify the place and mode in which the marriage (vaguely alleged as having been performed at "St. George's," apparently meaning in the parish of St George's-in-the-East) was celebrated, and also the places and times in which the adultery was committed. With this order the petitioner did not comply, and took no further step in the suit. Under these circumstances, Mr. SEYMOUR now moved on behalf of Mrs. O'KANE either for an order to compel the petitioner to bring in the particulars directed, or for a rule to show cause why the petition should not be taken off the file because Mr. O'KANE had not prosecuted it with reasonable diligence and apparent bona fides. The petitioner—although, no doubt, he had notice of the nature of the motion—did not appear, nor, so fas as I could learn, were any of the numerous bar present engaged on his behalf. Indeed, it is believed that counsel have never been retained on his behalf at all. The noble co-respondent did not appear formally—indeed, he had no opportunity of doing so, on a proceeding of this kind. But the able and acute practitioner, Dr. SPINKS, who has long been retained for him, was present, and, I dare say, "watched" his interest with the proper vigilance. The application of the prophesy that all the parties to the suit will be found to belong to the "élite of society."

BRITISH AID TO THE REBELLION.

THE RAPPAHANNOCK—PROSECUTION OF ENGINEER RUMBLE BY GOVERNMENT.

From the European Times, Feb. 1.

Mr. WILLIAM RUMBLE, Engineering Inspector of machinery at Her Majesty's dockyard of Sheerness, was charged at Sittingbourne, on the 26th, with two distinct breaches of the Foreign Enlistment Act; first, in having, without the leave of the Crown, fitted out, or procured to be fitted out, the Rappahannock, with intent that she might be employed in the service of the Confederate States of America to commit hostilities against the United States of America; and secondly, in hiring or procuring divers persons to enlist in the service of the Confederate States. Mr. HARCOURT, in opening the case on the part of the Crown, said that in the latter part of 1863, a vessel, no longer suitable for Her Majesty's service, called the Victor, was sold by the Government to merchants of the City of London, named COLMAN and PEARSON. After the sale, some repairs and alterations of a prima facie innocent character were effected in the dockyard at Sheerness, in effecting which Mr. RUMBLE took a leading part; but matters subsequently occurred which showed that, if not from the commencement of these works, at all events from a very early period, he must have been aware of the purpose to which it was intended to put the vessel. Being in a condition quite unfit to go to sea, suddenly, on the night of the 24th of November, the vessel, which had been renamed the Scylla, sailed from Sheerness, and either at the Nore, or somewhere before she reached Calais, that name was painted out, and a new one, the Rappahannock, substituted. The Captain and officers declared the ship to be a Confederate war-of-war, and invited those on board to sign articles. Mr. RUMBLE went over to Calais, showed himself in constant communication with the parties on board the Rappahannock, and engaged men to go out from England to serve in various capacities in that vessel. If the charges were true, this was the case of a man bearing the Queen's commission, and yet engaging in transactions grossly violating his allegiance, and injuring the nation of which he was a citizen. Witnesses were then examined in support of this statement. Several men—firemen, laborers and mechanics—said they had been either engaged by Mr. RUMBLE, or engaged in that gentleman's presence, for services on board the ship, which, as appeared from the general evidence, was in a very incomplete state when she left Sheerness for Calais. Three of these witnesses gave their evidence in a very unsatisfactory manner. Wm. O'Kelly, who described himself as an American shipping-agent, whose business it was to procure seamen for American vessels, said that in November, understanding that there was a vessel at Sheerness requiring his services, he went there, but found she had gone. He accosted Mr. RUMBLE, saying that he knew some good men who wanted to go in the Scylla. Mr. RUMBLE said he was too late, but asked could the witness get good men, adding that about twenty would be required. He referred witness to Mr. COLEMAN'S office, No. 9 Clement's-lane, Lombard-street, for particulars, and on the Sunday following saw him there. Mr. RUMBLE said: "There is nothing doing at present, but if you call again Mr. PEARSON will let you know." On the Tuesday after he again saw him, and said, "Mr. RUMBLE, I understand you are sending men over; there are some went over last night;" to which Mr. RUMBLE replied, "I have nothing to do with the ship now; it was bought by Mr. COLMAN from Mr. PEARSON. Mr. PEARSON is a bankrupt, and cannot make a purchase; but, as they are brothers-in-law, Mr. COLMAN purchased this ship for him." Witness then asked who had to do with the ship. He said, "Capt. CAMPBELL, then in Calais." Witness said, "I have a good mind to go over and see Capt. CAMPBELL," and Mr. RUMBLE replied, "Well, I would go if I were you," rather in a bantering tone. Witness rejoined, "I will go if I can raise the money," and defendant said, "Why don't you go?" They then parted. Witness went that night to Calais, and next morning went alongside the ship Rappahannock; she had no colors hoisted then. At 11 o'clock the same day, alongside the Rappahannock, witness met Mr. RUMBLE in company with Mr. RAMSAY, the chief officer of the ship. He asked me (said the witness) what I was doing there. I said I came according to his advice. He said, "Now, are you honest?" I said, "Certainly." He observed, pointing to Mr. RAMSAY, "This is the man who got me into all this trouble." I said, "There is no more trouble now; she is in a French port." He said, "Right; now we don't care who knows it." He then said to Mr. RAMSAY, "This is the man that can find us a crew." Mr. RAMSAY said, "He had better see the First Lieutenant." "I said, "No, I want to see Capt. CAMPBELL himself." The witness described his meeting with Capt. CAMPBELL, who told him he should not want a crew for six weeks; and next deposed to the following conversation, as having been originated by Mr. RUMBLE: He said, "Now, can I depend upon you?" I said, "Certainly." He said, "We thought you belonged to the other party." I told him, "No, I belong to no party." He then said, "She will want 40 men." I said, "More like 100." He remarked, "This is a money-making affair." I said, "I know it is, if it is properly worked." He said, "We will work together." I said, "Certainly, share and share alike." He then inquired, "What are you going to do now?" I said, "I am going to London by the next boat, as I consider my business here as done." He said, "It is done; leave everything else to me." And he proposed to meet me at PEARSON'S office at 10 o'clock on Saturday. I went to Mr. PEARSON'S office, but I did not see Mr. RUMBLE there or again till today. I was taken ill on the following Sunday, and continued very ill for three weeks. He gave me a sovereign just before I left Calais. Cross-examined: When he gave me the sovereign I told him that I had nine children. I also told him that I was very poor. I have been a shipping-master for American ships since 1853. After seeing Mr. RUMBLE I stayed in Sheerness till 2 o'clock; during the interval I telegraphed. I should not know the place again, nor yet the name of the person to whom I telegraphed; I believe it was to a Mr. GIFFORD. I got no answer. I was accompanied by a friend, a London pilot. I do not remember his name. In speaking to Mr. RUMBLE I did not give my own name. I gave him that of "Williams." I never previously passed by any other false name. I saw they were using shams, and I thought I might as well use a sham as another. I borrowed the money to go to Calais from a friend, and am not obliged to give his name. Suppose it was from "my uncle." Being pressed on this point, the witness said he would not answer. Being directed to do so by the Bench, he said it was "a Mr. NUNN, a clerk in the city, living in Westbourne-square." Mr. GIFFARD: When first, if ever, did you have any conversation with persons connected with the United States of America? The witness fenced with this question, and the evasive answer which he returned was taken down. The question being repeated, he said he had been in constant communication with the authorities of the United States since 1853; the nature of his business was such as to require it. He was not connected with the United States Consul, or any of the American authorities when he went on this mission to Sheerness. He went simply as a shipper of seamen for American ships, and not in any way in relation to a supposed equipping of a Confederate ship. First got into communication with the members of her Majesty's Government on that day fortnight.

The prosecution closed at this point, and Mr. GIFFARD addressed the Bench for the defence, contending that no infringement of the Foreign Enlistment Act had been committed by this client. His learned friend conveniently overlooked the fact that the Government had sold this vessel to the very parties to whom Mr. RUMBLE, in perfect good faith, was giving such slight assistance as was habitually afforded in every one of the great shipping ports. It must be borne in mind that everything done toward getting out the vessel prior to her departure from Sheerness was done under the eyes of all the Government officials in the dockyard. After the vessel reached France it had, indeed, been shown that Mr. RUMBLE still took an interest in her; but this was intelligible as soon as it was mentioned that, from considerations of personal friendship toward the owners of the Scylla, Mr. RUMBLE had become guarantee for the payment of tradesmen in Sheerness, with whom that owner had been dealing. His object in proceeding to Calais was simply to procure the money for which he had thus made himself liable. At the outside, all that could be entertained against his credit was suspicion, and he asked the Bench to set against considerations of that nature the high reputation Mr. RUMBLE had always maintained. Mr. RUMBLE read an explanatory statement of the circumstances involved in his connection with the Scylla, and expressly contradicted many statements of the witnesses for the prosecution, more particularly those made by O'KELLY.

The case was sent for trial before the Court of Queen's Bench. Bail was accepted.

ANGLO-REBEL COMMENTS ON THE SIEGE OF CHARLESTON AND AMERICAN ORDNANCE.

The Richmond correspondent of the London Times, under date of Dec. 21, writes:

"It is a singular commentary upon the brilliant engineering capacity of Gen. Gillmore, of which so much has been said in Northern journals, that after one of the costliest sieges on record, and after hundreds of lives, and the expenditure of mountains of projectiles, he has attained no result greater than was in his reach so far back as June, 1862. It will appear hardly credible that before the battle of Secessionville it was competent for the Federals to establish batteries as near to the heart of the City of Charleston as is the situation of their present batteries on Morris Island at Cummings' Point. It should be understood by your readers that there is on James Island, near the Stono river, to the west of Secessionville, a church, which lies at a distance of precisely four and a half miles from St. Michael's Church, in the centre of Charleston. This church was occupied by the Federals before the battle of Secessionville in June of last year. It was again occupied by them before their attack upon Battery Wagner, on the 10th of July of the current year. Upon the 16th of last July the Confederates attacked the Federal garrison which held the church in question, and, inasmuch as the garrison consisted almost entirely of black troops, little difficulty was experienced by the Confederates in recovering the position. At the same moment GILLMORE'S main force was doing desperate fighting and cannonading, which resulted at the end of 58 days in landing him at a point equi-distant from Charleston with that which he had evacuated almost without a struggle on the 16th of July, 1863. It will readily be believed that since July the Confederates have not been idle in providing against the danger of this point falling again into Federal hands. I am assured that the science of defensive military engineering has been exhausted in securing James and Sullivan's Islands from the possibility of successful attack. There is, I have little reason to doubt, but one possible avenue by which the Federals can indulge the venom of the Atlantic Monthly, so often shed and projected against Charleston, and enable the writers in its pages to sow the ruins of that hated city with salt. It will be by landing 50,000 men on the South Carolina coast, by seizing upon the Charleston and Savannah Railroad and advancing along it upon the former city. It may be imagined, before such an attempt can be successful, what an amount of labor, time and money it will exact. Any other Government on earth, save that which has attempted to canalize the Mississippi, and to secure its free navigation by supplying fresh steamers upon its waters quicker than they can be burnt up by the enemy, would be aghast at the stupendous magnitude of such a task as supplying the requisite transport for this enterprise, and establishing the necessary supply depots at Hilton Head and Port Royal. Vengeance is doubtless as sweet to Boston as to any other city on earth, but generations yet unborn will wince under their experience of the burden laid on their shoulders by such men as Mr. EVERETT. It needs but the folly of a few additional enterprises like the attempted capture of Charleston by land to make the burden heavier than future generations can bear.

It seems to me that whenever and if ever reasonableness and sobriety resume their sway in Boston and New-York, the siege of Charleston, as conducted by the Federals, will be looked on as one of the most stupendous follies ever witnessed upon earth. In order to attain to such a success as is involved in the ability to throw Greek fire into Charleston from a distance of four miles and a half, and in order to stop a great port of entry for blockade-runners, a sum of money has been lavished which would purchase the whole State of South Carolina. It is probably known in England long before this time that the Greek fire is not more formidable than a child's Christmas cracker; it will probably be known hereafter that Charleston, as a port of entry for blockade-running vessels, will do as much business in 1864 as she did in 1862. But, putting spite, venom and vengeance out of the question, I believe that never upon earth was an enterprise undertaken in which the object sought possessed a value so disproportionate to the price which it exacted for its attainment. The payment of this price by the Federals, unrewarded though it has hitherto been by any encouraging success, is the measure, not of the value which they attach to the possession of the City of Charleston in ruins, but of the grudge which, ever since the days of ANDREW JACKSON, the Northern States, and preëminently New-England, have nursed and cherished against the home of 'nullification,' the cradle of secession.

Again I feel tempted to raise a warning voice about the disparity of the armament on board of the English and American navies. It is impossible for those who have been many months absent from England to be well informed as to the actual state of public opinion at the present moment upon this vital subject. But, judging from the officers of Her Majesty's Navy who have at rare intervals brought vessels of war into Confederate ports, it appears still to be held that the 68-pounder, or 8-inch smooth-bore, is England's best weapon of offence against iron-clad vessels. The experience gained at Charleston enables me confidently to affirm that as well might you pelt one of the Yankee monitors or the Ironsides with peas as expect them to be in any way damaged by 8-inch shot. Another disagreeable question forces itself upon an Englishman's attention when he is cognizant of the terrific broadside thrown by the eight 11-inch guns of the Ironsides—one of the most formidable broadsides, in the opinion of the defenders of Charleston, which has ever been thrown by any vessel upon earth. Have we any ship in existence which could successfully resist such a broadside, and respond to it with anything like commensurate weight and vigor? I should be faithless to my duty if I did not mention that it is the universal opinion of all the English officers serving in the Confederate army with whom I have conversed that England is behind America in the weight and power of the guns sent by both nations to sea. It is still a matter of the greatest surprise to those who are cognizant of the endless experiments in guns and projectiles which are every day made by the Federal and Confederate States that England has not thought it worth her while to attach to the armies of both nations such a commission as McCLELLAN had in the Crimean War, with a view to their gaining such scientific information with regard to ordnance and projectiles as at this moment can be gained nowhere else on earth. It is my conviction that from both sections such commissioners would receive nothing but courteous and unreserved information upon all that is important for them to know. It is scarcely creditable to our Government that they should be blind to the opportunities for gaining information which this gigantic conflict affords, or that from Old World pride they should refuse to avail themselves of the experience to be derived from a continent destined henceforth and evermore to play no secondary part in the drama of the world."

THE TRUTH CONFESSED.

From the London Times.

When Mr. M. GIBSON gives his unreserved and unqualified homage to the Federal cause, he knows not of how much of a sort is his wisdom and that of the "model Republic," as it used to be called the other day. The United States were a system complete in itself; a new world disclaiming all affinity and sympathy with the old; a new bond of union that was to destroy all other nations, and absorb their materials. The new volcano was to eat out the heart of the ancient mountain, and rear its uniform geometrical cone to the skies. Wherever, by inevitable chance, the new creation came in contact with the old, with old feelings, old rights, old habits, old opinions, there was no compromise, no joining of the broken bones, no healing of the sore, but simply life, health and universal extension to the new, and defiance, destruction, confusion, abolition, extermination, death to the old. Truth and justice are the common ground and mean between all nations, but not between the United States and the rest of the world. In all differences the only measure of their demands was, what they were likely to get by playing on the fears, or the scruples of other States. Their territorial maxims had no other reason than the will of the tyrant. Their future was terrible, gigantic, universal, crushing and overwhelming, till the vision itself became an incubus, and thoughful men began to see that if this was the American future, then America had not future. Such was the Republic in its unbroken "integrity," as Mr. M. GIBSON calls it. This was the dream which began to frighten the Old World, and which Mr. M. GIBSON thinks it most unreasonable that the Southern States should contemplate with dismay. It was the dream of an Almaschar, which he himself dispelled with a kick. The Southerners were daily told of a universal organization in which the sovereign will of a majority should override all Constitutions, all international law, all institutions, every right and interest that stood in its way. They dreaded, and it must be said they might justly dread, the full brunt of that tyranny which they had long known, and which, no doubt, they had helped to create, but which now they saw about to be turned upon themselves. Can we, who know the utter unscrupulousness and the boundless aggressiveness of American politics, wonder at the apprehensions of those who found they were speedily to be done by as they had done, and that when the balance of power passed from the South to the North, the South would find it was to be trodden under foot?

Mr. M. GIBSON clings to this compact and uniform scheme of universal federation, a tyrant majority, and general assimilation of habits and opinions. He hopes it may still be realized, or, if not quite in our time, yet put again in the way to be realized. The calamities of the States are a loss to us he says, and if we don't fret ourselves about them it is from apathy towards the sufferings of our own people. The Confederates, too, he says, have betrayed the blackness of their policy, and made a glory of their shame. They have avowed that they intended, and still intend, to establish a mighty Slave-Republic, which shall restore Slavery and perpetuate it to all time. For this matter, the Confederates have had no choice but to set up a positive policy, for it would have been impossible otherwise to conduct the war and maintain a standing-ground in the opinion of mankind. As to the feelings of this country, it is true, we are not justified in regarding with exultation or satisfaction so terrible a calamity as that which has befallen so many millions of our own race. Nobody of common feeling does hear of the mutual slaughter and other sufferings entailed by the war without commiseration. But while the Republic was overtopping and overshadowing us, while it stretched its limbs and raised its tones to the scale of a giant, it was impossible but that our sympathy should be weakened. We feel for men; not for giants, for monsters, for madmen, for those altogether out of our rank and species. But grant that the commercial injury is great, and that the general derangement of trade threatens to inflict even more serious injuries, yet it is impossible to prevent political considerations from intruding themselves, and even making a set-off the other way. Mr. M. GIBSON cannot, surely, demand from us that we should absolutely wish the United States to retain their "integrity," or now recover it, so as to make a vast political unity of the kind Mr. BRIGHT describes? That would be to wish our own abasement and our own destruction. Does he think that, merely in the interest of philanthropy and commercial prosperity, we wish all the continent of Europe to become united under one government, and be administered by one majority or one man? Where should we be in that case? Where would Europe itself be? Yet few can doubt that Europe would use its aggregate power more justly and more generously than a vast American federation. England does not wish the disunion of its neighbors, so long as they are indeed its neighbors; but it cannot possibly help wishing the disunion of those who are uniting with a view to universal dominion or ascendancy. But this is the far horizon which Mr. M. GIBSON scarcely allows to appear in his very pretty picture of the world as it should be. Glibly and dapperly he gathers us into a circle, and joins us hand in and, telling us we have nothing to do but to buy and sell, let every one do as he pleases, and make one another happy. We are only to dance round him, keeping our hands still joined, and doing what everybody else wants us to do. Why should not so pleasant an occupation last forever, and who so wicked as to be glad when it stops? But, unfortunately, the game which Mr. M. GIBSON laments to see so rudely interrupted was one in which not only the Southern States of America, but England, and eventually all nations, were to act a part contrary to their nature and principles. They were to be crushed, absorbed and reduced to a moral submission worse than Slavery itself. Even if the Southerners and the British public are mistaken in this view of the case, this, and not mere envy and jealousy, makes them acquiesce in American disunion."

ANOTHER SINGULAR BEQUEST—WILL MR. LINCOLN ACCEPT IT?

In the Vice-Chancellor's Court, on Thursday, the case of NEW v. BONAKER was heard. The question arose under the wills of two brothers named GEORGE and ISAAC ROBERTS. GEO. ROBERTS, stating that he was about to leave for America, gave to his brothers ISAAC and BENJAMIN, and two other persons $4,000 and $1,000 Virginia Stock, and $2,000 United States Stock, which he then held, and such money as his executors might recover under a certain policy, and ready money and securities for money, in trust, to invest and hold with the other stock, and to pay the dividends to his brothers and his two sisters for life equally, and after the decease of the survivor he gave the principal to the President and Vice-President of the United States and the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania respectively for the time being, to be by them holden upon trust to invest $2,000 in the purchase of freehold land in Pennsylvania and the rents and interest of the remainder of the stock to invest in other stock in the nature of compound interest until the sum should amount to $100,000, and to apply this sum, with the said estate so directed to be purchased, in endowing a college for the instruction of youth in the State of Pennsylvania; and it was his will that moral philosophy be taught therein, and a Professor engaged who should inculcate and advocate the natural rights of the black people of every clime and country until they be restored to an equality in civil rights with their white brethren throughout the Union. ISAAC ROBERTS by his will devised all his ready money and securities, and the residue of his estate and effects, real and personal, to the trustees of the free grammar school at Evesham for the benefit of the school. ISAAC, being the representative of ROBERT and MARY, made the above bequest, and, BENJAMIN and the sisters being dead, the mayor and burgesses of Evesham corresponded with the objects of the charitable gifts in America in the will of GEORGE, and addressed a memorial, the result being that the Attorney-General in America was consulted, and he was of opinion that the bequests could not be enforced, and should not be if it could, being of doubtful utility; and this was followed by a letter from the American Ambassador, Mr. DALLAS, who declined the gift. Trustees had been appointed under the Evesham school, and the syndics of the corporation to prove ISAAC'S will, filed this bill (making the Attorney-General a party) to administer ISAAC'S ISAAC'S estate, and to declare the trusts of the will of GEORGE ROBERTS. After some discussion, it was agreed that at present nothing could be done but to direct accounts and inquiries. His Honor expressed a doubt whether the mere repudiation of a trust did away with the trust, and directed accounts and inquiries as to whether the charitable purposes of GEORGE'S will were void; whether the President and Vice-President of the United States had accepted the trust, and whether such trusts were or were not illegal; and whether, according to the law of Pennsylvania, they were capable of being carried into effect.

THE ENGLISH IRON-CLADS.

At the commencement of each year we have to record some change, and generally some improvement, in the design and construction of our future fleet of iron-clads. Cautiously, by slow but very sure degrees, do we at last seem to be attaining perfection in the models which each season brings forth; and the reconstruction of our navy is now going steadily and promises even to go quickly forward. It has certainly not been from lack of advice that the Admiralty has not achieved this gratifying result long before. It reflects no small credit on the Comptroller's Department that, amid the multitude of conflicting counsellors, such perfect designs as those for the Black Prince and Warrior were first given to the world, and that in form and size, and speed, though not in strength, they were enabled again to improve upon these with the Northumberland, the Agincourt and the Minotaur. But in the vessels ordered for this year we have in most cases almost a total change from all that have gone before. The experience gained in the construction and sailing of these ponderous craft has gradually developed certain general rules and principles which were at first supposed to be diametrically in opposition to all plans for armor-plated sea-going ships. Thus, then, in the new ships we no longer find the list restricted to vessels of 5,000, 6,000 or 7,000 tons and upward, but learn gladly that we are at last to have such much needed craft as small sloops, of less than 1,000 tons, built of wood, yet carrying their batteries encased in 4½ inches of solid iron. It was thought impossible two years ago to build such vessels, and even now it sounds strange to hear of 900-ton ships coated with 4½ inch armor, such, in fact, as the Enterprise sloop will be when launched next month from Deptford. The Research, just launched at Pembroke, is another of the same class. She is a sloop of only 1,250 tons, yet is coated from end to end with Warrior plates, and her first trip round from Milford set at rest whatever doubts might till then have been entertained as to the perfect seaworthiness of these small vessels, covered with such tremendous plating. There was a heavy gale blowing when she left Milford, which the Research was able to face easily, though the Geyser, a wooden paddle frigate, sent to escort her, could not, and was obliged to ride it out at anchor in the haven. The Research came round by sea at an average speed of 10½ knots, through rough water, proved herself light and buoyant, turning quickly and rolling easily. Yet this sloop, which is only of 1,250 tons, and draws no more than 14 feet of water, is more completely plated than even the Warrior, and will throw a broadside equal in weight to that of the renowned iron frigate. The changes in our principles of construction which these vessels mark so strongly have all been effected by Mr. REED, the new Chief Constructor to the Navy, who was the earliest to deny the necessity for such gigantic ships as those of the Northumberland class, and to point out that there was no nautical or scientific reason why, with certain modifications of design, small corvettes and even sloops and gunboats should not be strongly protected as the largest frigate. Fortunately, as it seems from the success of the new vessel, the Research, the Admiralty have to a great measure adopted Mr. REED'S plans, and have decided to let him carry them out after his own manner; and 10 new iron-clads, of all sizes, and to answer various purposes, are now building, and some nearly built. These vessels are the Enterprise, sloop, 4 guns, 990 tons builders' measurement, 160 horse power; the Research, sloop, 1,250 tons, 7 guns, and 200 horse-power; the Favorite, corvette, 2,372 tons, 8 guns, and 400 horse-power; the Pallas, 2,372 tons, 5 guns, and 600 horse-power; the Zealous, 3,715 tons, 16 guns, and 800 horse-power: the Lord Clyde and the Lord Warden, sister ships, each 4,067 tons, 32 guns, and 1,000 horse-power; and the Bellerophon, 4,246 tons, 12 guns, and 1,000 horse-power. Of these eight ships the Enterprise was originally designed as a wooden sloop, named the Circassian, and so also with the Research, Favorite, and Zealous respectively a wooden sloop, corvette, and frigate actually in frame, which Mr. REED had to adapt as he best could; and the forms of these, therefore, he contends are not such as he entirely approves for iron-going vessels, especially in the shape of the bows, which are much too fine beneath not to render them liable to pitch. The Lord Warden and the Lord Clyde, the Pallas and the Bellerophon, are entirely from stem to stern of Mr. REED'S design. The two former are improvements on vessels of the Royal Oak class; the two latter are quite new, both in principle of construction, and in the purpose they are intended to fulfill, and it is of them especially that we wish to speak as the finest samples of our new iron-clads. The Bellerophon is in point of strength intended to be a monster among these monsters, to be in fact, as terrible an assailant to iron-clads as an iron-clad would be to wooden ships. The object with which this vessel is designed is, in case of another great naval war, to avoid a repetition of the long dreary work of blockading an enemy's fleet by wearisome and dangerous cruising off the mouth of harbors. The Bellerphon is to be a vessel of such strength and speed and tremendous weight of guns as, in case of an enemy's iron fleet running into port, she can follow them with impunity, and at long range fight them at their moorings, till she either drives them ashore or drives them out to sea. Specially built for the discharge of such peculiarly arduous duties, it is almost needless to say how carefully every point in her equipment has been considered; and as Mr. PENN undertakes that her speed shall equal her strength, there seems to be very little doubt but that, with her impenetrable sides and her armament of ten 300-pounders and two 600-pounders, she will be the most formidable seagoing frigate the world has yet seen. The length of this vessel is to be 300 feet, and her breadth 50 feet; her tonnage will be 4,246 tons, her displacement 7,053 tons; and though carrying the heaviest armor and armament ever sent afloat, her draft will be only 21 feet forward and 26 feet aft, less than the draft of ordinary two-deckers. The height of her lowest portsill from the water will be 9½ feet, the distance between the guns 15 feet, and the height between decks 7 feet. Her midship section is smaller than that of the Warrior, and to that extent, therefore, she will be easier to steam and sail. She is to have four masts—only the first square-rigged, the three others carrying immense fore and aft sails, a rig from which the French have got such admirable results with their iron frigates under canvas. In the engines of the Bellerophon it is hoped to effect a great improvement as regards the consumption of coal. The Black Prince, which is now the fastest ocean steamer afloat, burns at the rate of 4¾ pounds of coal per indicated horse power per hour, and on her trial trip, with her screw going 54 revolutions, she did 15½ knots an hour, and can be depended on, at sea, to average as high as 13. In the Bellerophon, however, it is hoped, by working with superheated steam furnace, condensation and expansion, to reduce the consumption of coal to 2½ pounds per indicated horse power per hour. If this great result be effected, she will carry 16 days' fuel, instead of nine, and if, as is expected, Mr. PENN can get 65 as more revolutions out of her engines, she can be depended on at sea to average 15 knots, or nearly 18 miles an hour.

The rigs and framing of the Bellerophon will be much the same as those of other iron frigates, with the exception that the stringer plates and diagonal bracings will all be of steel—that is to say, of less than half the weight, and more than four times the strength, of the present system of wrought-iron fastenings. Wherever steel can be used with advantage, in point of strength and lightness, it will be adopted in the frame of this new frigate and Mr. REED estimates that by this method, and while making the hull infinitely stronger, he will save in weight two or three hundred tons, which can be infinitely better bestowed in increasing the thickness of the armor plating. It is the first time that steel has ever been used in these vessels, and Mr. REED deserves every credit for adopting it, though it was not difficult to foresee that it must soon have been extensively used.

The armor of the Bellerophon is to be no less than 16 inches thick, and that is to rest on 16 inches of solid teak beams. This outer protection is quite formidable enough, but what it protects is of its kind quite as strong in proportion. The inner skin consists of two plates, each of ¾-inch thickness, with a stout layer of painted canvass between to deaden concussion. Outside the skin come single-iron stringers of the toughest steel. These angle-iron stringers in any metal would be of immense strength, and project from the inner skin 9¾ inches and 10 inches alternately. Thus they form so many longitudinal sneives, of the depth mentioned, which run from stem to stern of the ship, two under each row of plates, and in these the teak beams are laid, the longitudinal layers of the angle-irons keeping the beams up to their work and preventing their lateral splintering, while they also support the plates with their edges and prevent their bending in unfairly on the teak. The Bellerophon is not thus coated from end to end and over all with this tremendous armor. In the centre and for 90 feet of her broadside she is thus protected, from 5 feet below the water line to the level of the upper deck. In this space are her guns, five 300-pounders, with one 600-pounder at each side. For the rest of her length there is only a belt of this massive armor, which goes to the same depth beneath the sea to six feet above it, so that she cannot be hit in any part where the water could enter.

The Pallas is designed for great speed, both in sailing and steaming, to carry only five guns, all 100-pounders of the longest range—a bow chaser forward and two at each side. Her length is to be 225 feet, her breath 50 feet, and her tonnage 2,372, with a draught of water of 18 feet forward and as much as 21 feet aft, in order to enable her to turn very quickly. She is to be of wood, but to be entirely coated from end to end with 4½-inch armor. She is to have a screw of great diameter. Her engines to be 600-horse power, and on the economical principle carried out with such marked success by Messrs. HUMPHREYS & TENNENT on board the Mooltan and other of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's vessels. Engined on this principle, she is expected and ought to be able to carry coals enough for 16 days' hard steaming, and with her huge fore and aft sails (only the foremast being square rigged) should have but little occasion to steam at all except in chase. Fourteen knots per hour seagoing speed is what is anticipated from this frigate, and at this rate, and with her large crew and heavy guns, she undoubtedly ought to be able to sweep the seas of any number of war vessels less strongly plated, less heavily armed and manned, and less speedy than herself.

FRENCH NEWSPAPERS ON THE ENGLISH PRESS.

The Paris Temps, of Wednesday, contains the following remarks respecting certain comments on the French debates which have appeared in the columns of some of our cotemporaries: "We have much regard for the English press; it is the first in the world, and the fitting expression of a great and free people; but it is not infallible, and the manner in which some of its principal organs have regarded our discussion upon the Address certainly will not reflect any honor upon them. It would be impossible to display more ignorance and frivolity than the Times, whose article the Constitutionnel was unlucky enough to make use of, without, however, daring to reproduce it entire; a circumstance we can easily understand, for the Times, under the pretext of censuring M. THIERS, drew the most unjust and the most insulting picture of our institutions, represented us as subjected to a sort of Asiatic despotism, and rendered homage to the power and magnanimity of the Emperor, for the insertion in the Moniteur of M. THIER'S speech." The Siècle has also some remarks on this subject. After referring to the diplomatic correspondence between Saxony and Great Britain upon the Schleswig-Holstein question, it says: "Instead of occupying itself with this discussion, in which the British Cabinet does not always show to the best advantage, the Times and the Morning Post prefer to fire some shots at the address of the French Opposition, and the Constitutionnel hastens to applaud. Cannot the English journals which boast that they belong to a free country, understand why French Deputies should claim the extension of public liberty? Are these journals quite sincere in what they say? Are not their attacks and their attempts to inflame the debates a weapon of war directed against the Government itself? What has occurred to justify the hostile intervention of the London newspapers? Faithful to doctrines which do not date from yesterday, M. THIERS manifested his predilection for the Parliamentary system. M. ROUHER, in conformity with the constitution of 1852, defended personal government. M. JULES FAVRE, without entering into the systems brought forward, showed the abuses and the inconvenience of laws that are too restrictive, and asked that they might be modified. Is not all this quite natural? Do not such oratorical struggles become a great people? It will be said that they had a passionate character; but which were more provoking, the orators of the Government or those of the Opposition? However, the opinions of the English journals upon our internal affairs is of very little matter to us; those affairs do not concern them, nor do we submit them to their approval. Whence comes, therefore, the fuss now being made about the recent articles in the Times and Morning Post? If they had blamed M. ROUHER or M. ROULAND, would they have had the honor of appearing on the front page of the Moniteur? The semi-official organs should remember the attacks upon them by the English press, and exclaim with the poet, 'Timeo Danaos.'"

FUNERAL OF ADMIRAL HAMELIN.

The funeral service for the late Admiral HAMELIN, Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honor, was performed at 12 o'clock yesterday in the church of the Invalides with extraordinary pomp. The remains of the deceased were removed at eight in the morning from the Hotel of the Legion of Honor to the church of the Invalides, where they were placed on a rich catafalque decorated with the arms of the Admiral. The grand façade of the Invalides was hung with black cloth and decorated with flags. The names of the various engagements in which the Admiral distinguished himself were inscribed on black inside the church. A double file of Invalides lined the two courtyards, and detachments from almost all the regiments in Paris were formed in order of battle before the entrance, under the orders of Gen. SOUMAIN. The great bodies of the State, the Corps Legislatif, the Courts of Justice, the army and the navy were represented at the ceremony by several of their members. Near to the coffin were the Ministers of Justice and of Commerce, Marshals Regnault de St. Jean d'Angely, Forey, Randon, Vaillant; M. de Chasseloup Laubat, Minister of Marine; Admirals Charner, La Roncière le Noury, and La Predour; General the Marquis de Lorestine, Governor of the Invalides, and the Abbé Coquereau. The Emperor and the Prince NAPOLEON were represented by their aides-de-camp. The Diplomatic Corps sent several of its members. Twenty-six naval noncommissioned officers sent from Cherbourg to attend the funeral stood round the catafalque. The funeral ceremony, which was performed by the Archbishop of Paris, was announced by a salute of thirteen guns. At the conclusion of the service the coffin was placed in a hearse drawn by six horses, and brought to the outer gate; a second salute of thirteen guns was fired, the troops defiled before the hearse, and the remains of the Admiral were deposited in the vault prepared for them. The expense of the funeral was defrayed by the Marine Department. Immediately after the ceremony the large gates of the Invalides were thrown open to the public, and a scene of confusion ensued which it would have been impossible to prevent, in consequence of the immense multitude which rushed in.

Admiral HAMELIN was the fifteenth Grand Chancellor of the Legion of Honor. The first was the celebrated LACEPEDE, who enjoyed that dignity from the foundation of the order on the 21st of August, 1805, until the 7th of April, 1814. His successors were the Baron DE PRADT, appointed by LOUIS XVIII., on the 7th of April, 1814; the Viscount LACEPEDE; Marshal MACDONALD, Duke of Tarentum; Marshal MORTIER, Duke of Treviso; Marshal GERARD; Gen. OUDINOT, Duke of Reggio; Gen. SUBERVIE, Marshal MOLITOR, Marshal EXELMANS, Gen. Count ORNANO; Gen. LEBRUN, Duke of Plaisance; Marshal PELISSER, Duke of Malakoff; and Admiral HAMELIN. Marshals OUDINOT, MOLITOR, EXELMANS, and ORNANO are interred in the vaults of the Hotel des Invalides.

A REBEL AGENT IN PARIS.

PARIS, Wednesday, Jan. 20.

A Confederate naval officer now resides at Paris to direct the operations of Mr. JEFFERSON DAVIS' rather limited navy during its stay in European waters. A land Admiral may be a title of new creation, but the desirability of such an appointment may be seen at a glance in these telegraph days. The Confederate officer, living close to a line of wires connected with nearly every part of Europe, has great facilities for learning the position of the enemy's forces, the harbors they may be found in, and where they are, or intend cruising. The different ports furnish him all the information he requires, and this information he immediately dispatches to those whom it may concern. It is not improbable that in all future wars land Admirals will be accredited to Neutral Powers, and that telegraphic lines will play a prominent or rather an unseen part in naval warfare. By this means too great damage may be done to the commerce of an enemy. The delegates of Mr. DAVIS may learn in Paris that a northern vessel, richly laden, is leaving Havre; he sends off a dispatch to Cherbourg, and the next day the unsuspecting property of Uncle Sam changes owners, or spreads a glare over the Channel.

The rumor that the Florida, still lying at Brest, had challenged the Kearsage appears to be unfounded. The Confederates know well that the States would give up three frigates for one, and have other intentions. There has been great difficulty in getting the Florida a new crew, without driving a coach and four through the Foreign Enlistment Act. The Southern naval men here have every desire to respect that act.

THE ACCIDENT TO THE LOUISIANA.

From the Liverpool Courier, Jan. 23.

By the courtesy of Messrs. GUION & Co. we are enabled to publish a complete and authoritative list of the men who were drowned by being washed overboard from the National Steam Navigation Company's steamer Louisiana, during the gale in the Atlantic on the 12th inst. We yesterday gave a partial list, and stated that the number of persons who lost their lives was believed to be seventeen, but subsequent inquiries show that the number is only fourteen, including two passengers, the third passenger, PUTNIER, being now found to be safe on board the vessel. The following is the list: Passengers—Messrs. Samuel Wright and Morris Barney. Firemen—Thomas M'Eachan, Hugh (?) Jones and Robert Almond. [The Christian name of Jones is believed to be Hugh, but there is some doubt about it.] Engineers—Charles Stewart and David Storms. Seamen—William Burns, Philip M'Cune, Thomas Young, James Casey, Peter Anderson, Thomas Aspinal and Alphonse Cheveux.

FASHIONS FOR FEBRUARY.

From La Follet.

We have this month to notice such an extensive list of elegant dresses, that we will only devote a limited space to general remarks. At the present moment, ball and evening dresses are of the first consideration. Low bodies are cut rather square, or slightly in the shape of a heart. Thick materials are usually made with round waists. Very wide sashes are worn with these, tied behind, with double falling bows; the sleeve is made with a bouillonné of the same material as the dress. The trimming of the skirt reaches about half a yard up from the bottom—narrow flounces, bouillonnés, bands of velvet or taffetas, lace, or chenille fringe, are all in vogue. A net-work formed of chenille, or with small hanging plush ornaments, is also worn; and fur is as fashionable as ever. Tartatane dresses are even trimmed with bands of swan's-down, and the effect produced is both novel and pretty. Swiss ceintures and corselets are still quite the rage. They are to be seen in so many different styles, that all tastes may be pleased; but those made with basques, and laced up in front, are, perhaps, the most stylish. Visiting dresses are frequently made quite pl

FROM THE SOUTH.

A REMARKABLE PROPOSAL

The Rebel Government Urged to Exchange Cotton and Tobacco for Food and Raiment.

YANKEE NOTIONS WANTED IN THE SOUTH.

COTTON AND TOBACCO.

A PROPOSAL TO EXCHANGE FOR FOOD AND RAIMENT.

From the Richmond Enquirer, Feb. 4.

Confederate currency has nearly lost its purchasing quality, and the strong arm of impressment has been substituted. This, too, has almost failed, and in a few months more will have lost its potency altogether. Efforts to improve the finances must be now, no matter how effectual they may prove in the obverse of time. The army must be fed, while the experiments for improving the currency are being tested. How shall it be done?

Cotton and tobacco approximate specie near enough for all the purposes that they are required by Confederate authorities. They can be exchanged or bartered for supplies, because they possess qualities of convertibility that do not belong to Confederate currency, and which cannot be given to it by any legislation whatever. The cotton and tobacco that is now spoiling on hand for want of a market—and the percentage of waste is enormous—if properly used by the authorities, can be made to infuse new life and activity into our people, give food and clothing to our army, and, by diminishing the use of Confederate money, facilitate its funding and approximate it to specie faster than any system of legislation that can be devised.

By advertising for sealed proposals to furnish, say fifty millions of rations of meat, within a given time, to be paid for in cotton and tobacco, the Commissary Department can test a scheme which has the sanction of some of the wisest heads of the army, and the approval of some of the most experienced merchants of this city.

The Whig, of yesterday, says:

"But the army must be fed; and we are happy in knowing that there is a plan, that has the sanction of very high authority in the army, which will not only deliver the country from this odious system of fraud, injustice and violence, but has the inappreciable merit of securing abundant supplies for the army. The plan is so simple that it is only wonderful that it has not long since been resorted to and persistently adhered to. It consists simply in issuing proposals for contracts for army supplies to the lowest bidder, to be paid for in cotton and tobacco. These two articles most nearly approximate the value of specie of any we have. They now lie inert, contributing not an iota to our security, but rather aggravating our danger by provoking the cupidity of our foes. They are articles of universal demand; all the world is hungering for them; and they can be made instrumental in extracting the means of comfort and safety to our armies from any quarter of the world. And while they thus give relief to our soldiers, they will impart renewed life, vigor, and buoyancy to the farmers of our land, depressed and discontented by the hated presence and unequal exactions of the press-gang."

We hope this plan may be tried; that advertisement for sealed proposals for rations may be made to ascertain the feasibility of this scheme.

From the Richmond Enquirer, Feb. 5.

In the outset of this revolution, the action of the Confederate Government was made to conform to the received doctrine of the Southern States—that Cotton was king. The trusted theory of our Government was that England, France and the civilized nations of the earth would all bow to our wishes and come as suppliants to the foot-stool of this imperial power. In accordance with these doctrines, cotton has been withheld from all outside nations, much more effectively by the restraints of our own Government than by the blockade of the enemy. No cotton has been allowed to run the blockade, except on Government account, or on special license, in some way connected with the Government advantage.

This theory of our Southern statesmen has been fairly and fully tested. For three years have we, with commendable self-denial, forborne the use of those sleeping energies of which we are possessed. King cotton has been bound down in double irons—Lincoln blockaders—whilst we embargo this unfortunate arbiter of civilization. Our policy subordinated to Lincoln's policy, holds this captive monarch in solitary confinement, there to waste in neglect and disease. Meanwhile the machinery of the world is fast adapting itself to fabrics from other materials, and when our king is restored to liberty, a thousand interests will obstruct his resumption to power.

This experience of three years is now an open book, inviting our earnest study. Has this disuse of cotton—this willful imprisonment of our own powers by our own Government—forced recognition from foreign nations? If this book of experience teaches us anything, it teaches us one thing never to be forgotten: Cotton, to be king, must be free to act and play his part on the theatre of the industrial world. At large and in unrestrained freedom, everywhere to visit the shops of industry, this Southern monarch wields an almost undisputed sceptre. But chained up by blockaders and pinioned to the earth by our own embargoes, this mighty potentate, like the Stuarts or the Bourbons, becomes an unhonored sham and an empty pretension.

This book of experience has also furnished some measure of the estimate in which our cotton is held by the world without. In the grievous want of this prime necessity, cotton has risen in price on the foreign markets six or seven hundred fold. Thus we have a practical test of its power to command the wealth of other nations.

Shall we not avail ourselves of these lessons, taught in the volume of our own experience? Is there to be no bend, no elasticity in our administrative counsels? May we not reverse the bow that has thus lost its spring, and use its reactionary power? Cotton as a prisoner, cotton in confinement, cotton hid in swamps or burnt in depots, has brought us no relief, it has procured us no influence in the counsels of foreign nations. Let us, therefore, abandon a policy that yields this harvest of domestic ruin, and only bears for us these fruits of national abasement abroad.

It is most evident that we cannot coerce foreign nations by withholding cotton from their workshops. The empire of cotton exists only in its use, and ceases when it is withdrawn from commerce. Let us partially change our administrative policy in respect to the great staples of cotton, tobacco and naval stores. Let us freely license the export of these prime necessities, and give them free passage through our lines in any direction, and to any markets that individual enterprise may elect. Holding this vast wealth under government control, let us use the wants of the world and the cupidity of mankind in the service of our self-defence.

In the history of nations, no government ever wielded elements of such vast and controlling potency. Let license of export be given after supplies of food and raiment have been delivered. Advertise for contracts of supply by sealed proposals, and the fervor of individual enterprise will discover hidden resources within ourselves, ample for the immediate wants of our army; whilst supplies from abroad will percolate upon us through the ten thousand fissures of our extended frontiers. Beef, bacon, medicines, shoes, cloth, and even firearms forged in Boston, would leak in upon our armies, ample in their aggregates for our great necessities.

Let us change our policy, or rather modify it so as to make useful the stores of wealth and power now lying unused and dormant on our hands.

THE LIBBY PRISON.

From the Richmond Enquirer, Jan. 5.

A shrewd inquirer into the quaint philosophy of human frivolities once asked the startling question, "What becomes of the pins?"—not of the millions which are manufactured, nor of the millions which are used, but of the millions which are lost. Any one might be tempted to ask, "What becomes of the Federal officers who go into the Libby?" During more than six months of active campaigning, almost daily have they entered there, squad after squad, and yet that unfathomable reservoir of humanity does not overflow. How is it that the many who go in do not thrust some of the many who are already there tumbling out of the windows? We are forcibly reminded of the fable of the sick lion, who was visited in his cave by all the beasts of the field, except a cunning old fox, who coming last of all, refused to call upon his leonine majesty; shrewd Renard noticed that all the footprints were directed inwards, and that none indicated that those who had gone in had ever come out again. In the same manner, the Libby takes in the captured Federals by scores, but lets none out; they are huddled up and jammed into every nook and corner; at the bathing troughs, around the cooking stoves, everywhere there is a wrangling, jostling crowd; at night the floor of every room they occupy in the building is covered, every square inch of it, by uneasy slumberers, lying side by side, and heel to head, as tightly packed as if the prison were a huge, improbable box of nocturnal sardines. But the authorities who thus pack up the unfortunate prisoners seem to be either heedless or ignorant of these facts. It is truly surprising that some pestilence has not already been the result of this indiscriminate herding together of human beings, who are thus forced constantly to breathe an impure air, and who are allowed no out-door exercise. They should have an open space outside, however limited, in which to obtain some respite from the unwholesome atmospheric diet; a piece of ground with a little patch of blue sky over it and a gush of fresh air and a sprinkle of sunshine in it, would be no tax upon the Confederate commissariat, and might, at least, render supportable a captivity which has become inevitable. Fresh air and sunlight, all physiologists tell us, are as absolutely essential to the economy of the human body as food and drink. If it should become necessary to reduce the diet of these prisoners to cold corn bread they will not have strength enough in them even to masticate it.

Exercise indoors is but a poor substitute, even provided the crowded condition of the prison would allow of it. The only apartment in the building where they can now walk is one of the lower rooms used as their kitchen. The passer-by may hear now and then of a morning the most demoniacal shouts proceeding from the gloomy interior of this room, and might readily be led to believe that a serious set-to at fisticuffs was in progress. He would soon discover, however, that it was only a desperate effort at a game of foot-ball. Notwithstanding the almost impenetrable cloud of smoke from the stoves, which constitutes the atmosphere of the room, he might see these haggard players working away with a zeal which proves how much they need, more than how much they enjoy, the exercise; he might see that uncouth black ball sent whirling hither and thither, and kicked at with an earnestness totally regardless of the proverbial sensibility of the human shin—kicked at as if the poor inanimate thing had done them some foul wrong which they meant fully to avenge, now that so admirable an opportunity presented itself; and he might now and then hear a triumphant shout which proclaimed that the mutilated ball, more fortunate than its persecutors, in spite of the alarming vicissitudes of its tempestuous career, has been sent home. There is no ruddy flush of health, however, about the prison faces, as the reward of so well disputed a contest; they look, after it, not invigorated, but pale and exhausted, and their shouts do not sound like the wholesome exuberance of mirth, but seem rather to shriek: "Let us out for a little while in the sunshine!" "Give us a breath of fresh air!" Locked up for many weeks and months, they have endured the suffocating heats of Summer, and have felt the keenness of the wintry wind, without enjoying its purity. As soldiers they may resign themselves silently to the weary tedium and to the unavoidable privations consequent upon captivity; but let it not be said of the Libby that it is, indeed, "a bourne from which no traveler returns." These men are kept here against our consent, and in direct opposition to the wishes of the Government, by the neglect of the despot for whom they have perilled their lives. Forgetting the ignominious treatment accorded our own brave officers by the Government of which they are the servile tools, it should be our aim to make the contrast in treatment of prisoners so much in our favor that even old Abe Lincoln's face would tingle with the blush of shame. We notice that iron bars have been placed in the Libby Prison. This should have been done long ago. Some of the Yankee officers facetiously remarked that the precaution was a wise one, as Col. Streight had fallen out of a rear window and hurt himself.

THE REBEL CONSCRIPTION.

From the Richmond Sentinel, Feb. 8.

Congress has passed a law to put in the army a new class of citizens, and it is not doubted that the military and exemption laws about to be enacted will add many others, now out of camp, if not out of service. But something more is necessary than to pass these laws—they must be executed. In this enforcement all good citizens ought to aid. Yet the pressure which is brought to bear upon the officers of the government, and the number of the applications to make exceptions, or special cases, of various individuals, are almost incredible. Congressmen will meet in grand council, and almost unanimously resolve that a certain class of citizens shall be mustered into the military service; but when they disperse they become the champions of a thousand applications either for actual exemption or for soft places. They bring to bear upon the officers appointed to enforce the law an influence which is not always easy to resist.

But the officers of the law must not suffer themselves to be swayed by personal influences. They must take their duty for their guide, and be governed by just and impartial rules, applied uniformly to all. It is seen how pleased the army is at the decree of the law that its ranks are to be strengthened, and the duty of defending home and property enforced equally on all. The word of promise must not be kept to the ear and broken to the hope.

The pressure, as we have said, is tremendous; but it must be withstood. We have letters before us from correspondents in different quarters, telling of the extraordinary, and in some cases disreputable if not disgraceful, efforts and subterfuges to evade the military law. The officers must be equal to their duty. A fear is gaining some ground that they are not; and the army and the country are watching them with keen eyes. But there is no reason as yet to condemn them. Frantic efforts to evade the law do not imply success. Appeals and representations must be listened to, but that does not mean that they must be yielded to, if unjust. The effervescence will soon subside, and applicants will tire of chafing against established rules and hammering at closed doors.

THE RETURNING TIDE.

From the Richmond Examiner, Feb. 9.

It is reliably estimated that during the past week over 100 Jews, principals of substitutes and others, have come on to Richmond from the South, put up at the hotels, and disappeared by the various underground routes to the North. How they go is known only to themselves and their agents, but it is true they have gone and are still going. Ten Jews left one of the principal hotels on Sunday morning. They are mostly of the wealthy class, and $10,000 is frequently tendered for a safe passage to the Potomac. It is intimated that persons in the guise of farmers are their most successful accomplices. They come to Richmond with marketing or a load of forage and carry out a load of blockade-runners concealed in their vehicles, making a more profitable speculation on their outward than their inward trip, as all pay and pay heavily, too.

Numbers have been overhauled on their journey through the lines by the detectives, and are now resting in Castle Thunder, but more have succeeded in escaping. It is hinted, with what amount of truth we know not, that the mysterious art of the embalmer has been employed in some recent cases of disappearance, and that several embalmed Jews, neatly encoffined, have gone through the lines, en route to bereaved relatives in the North.

NORTH CAROLINA.

The Raleigh Standard, of Jan. 29, contains the proceedings of two large public meetings, one held at Wilton, Granville County, and the other at Snow Hill, Greene County, both of which were held on the same day. At both meetings sets of resolutions were adopted unanimously, the character of which shows that the people are getting heartily sick of the rebellion.

The preamble adopted at the former place sets forth that the alarming and fearful tendency of the Confederate Government toward the establishment of a military despotism, by the enactment of laws that are unjust and oppressive, and is a just cause of complaint, and an earnest desire on our parts as citizens of a sovereign and independent State to restore justice, secure domestic tranquillity, perpetuate the blessings of civil and religious liberty to ourselves and posterity is just cause for assembling ourselves together.

The first resolution declares that all political power is vested in and derived from the people only, and all acts denying or abridging these rights are unconstitutional and ought to be resisted by all constitutional and legal measures. The second declares the subordination of the military to the civil power as a cardinal principle, and any attempt to destroy it by suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, to supersede the civil law upon the plea of military necessity, would be revolutionary and despotic. The third declares the passage of the law conscripting the principals of substitutes was a gross violation of plighted faith between the Government and her citizens, and calculated to destroy the confidence of the people in the Government. The fourth expresses the opinion that the passage of the remarkable propositions presented by Messrs. Phelan and Miles, now pending before Congress, would do more to subjugate the South than the armies of the North. The fifth declares that if North Carolina is forced to choose between a military despotism and her State sovereignty, she will choose the latter by a Convention. The sixth requests Gov. Vance, in the event the Confederate Congress adopts measures looking to the establishment of a military despotism, to convene the Legislature with a view to calling a convention; and the seventh resolution protests that, as Missouri and Kentucky have never become members of the Southern Confederacy, they are unwilling to submit to the enactment of unjust and oppressive laws passed by the votes of members from those States, unless they can be executed in said States.

At the Greene county meeting the preamble sets forth that "a crisis has reached that point in our national affairs in which it behooves North Carolina to arouse from her lethargy, rise in her might and say whether her flag, the pride of a Gaston, Stanley, and Macon shall wave over her sons as freemen or slaves." The first resolution declares that the war has lasted long enough, and North Carolina, in her sovereign power should propose a cessation of hostilities until an effort is made through a convention for an honorable peace. The second declares "North Carolina had no hand in making this war, notwithstanding the blood of her sons crieth from more than twenty thousand graves, from the battle fields of Great Betnel to that of Chickamauga." Thirdly—they say the political demagogues and speculators should be conscripted in the army or driven out of the South, for they are for prosecuting the war to the last man and last dollar, regardless of the woe and misery in the land, opposed to all measures of peace emanating from the people. Fourth—They declare that this Government was made by the people, and they have the right to rule, and say what shall or shall not be in defiance of traitors or dictators. The fifth asserts that the Conscription Act is a breach of faith, and a stigma on the Administration, and clearly shows what the people may expect. The sixth resolution indorses Gov. Vance for maintaining the supremacy of the civil over the military law and appeals to him to stand by them in this their hour of trial and tribulation. The seventh says they regard the Legislature as a sentinel on the watch-tower, placed there by the people to guard their liberties, and no period in the history of the State ever demanded their presence more imperatively than the present. The eighth declares that the desperate measures introduced before Congress, threatening to sweep the last vestige of civil and religious liberty, admonishes them to be more than vigilant. The ninth urges Gov. Vance to convene the Legislature immediately, and call that body to submit the question of "Convention or no Convention" to the people. The tenth asserts that there will be no peace until it is obtained through a convention, and urges the people to demand a convention, and then make "a long pull, a strong pull, and then pull altogether," until a lasting and honorable peace is secured. The eleventh declares that in the coming gubernatorial election they will support no man who is not pledged to go with the people. The resolutions indorses the course of W. W. Holden and M. Pennington, of the Standard and Progress.

The Standard says editorially:

We are sorry to see that the usually discreet Charlotte Democrat intimates that Gen. Hoke's brigade, recently sent to this State, may be ordered to interfere with the people in the free expression of their opinions. We learn that the brigade comes to this State at the request of Gov. Vance, for the purpose of recruiting, and at the same time aid in arresting deserters. We cannot believe it possible that the brave men who compose that brigade would sully their well-earned fame by inaugurating or taking part in scenes not warranted by the Constitution and laws.

THE LATE REBEL OPERATIONS AT NEWBERN.

Dispatch from Gen. Pickett.

Kinston, Feb. 3, 1864.

To Gen. S. Cooper:

I made a reconnoissance within a mile and a half of Newbern with Hoke's Brigade and a part of Corse's and Clingman's, and some artillery; met the enemy in force at Batchelor's Creek, killed and wounded about one hundred in all, captured thirteen officers and two hundred and eighty prisoners, fourteen negroes, two rifled pieces and caissons, three hundred stand of small arms, four ambulances, three wagons, fifty-five animals, a quantity of clothing, camp and garrison equipage and two flags.

Commander Wood, C. S. N., captured and destroyed the United States gunboat Underwriter.

Our loss thirty-five killed and wounded.

G. E. PICKETT, Major-Gen. Commanding.

DISPATCH FROM GEN. WHITING.

Wilmington, Feb. 4, 1864.

To Gen. S. Cooper: On the 2d instant, Gen. Martin, with the Seventeenth and Forty-second, and Col. Jackson's command from Kenansville, broke the railroad at Shepherdsville, driving the enemy from their works at Newport Barracks and across Newport River.

W. H. C. WHITING, Major-Gen.

THE RECENT MOVEMENT IN VIRGINIA.

OFFICIAL DESPATCH FROM GEN. LEE.

Orange Court House, Feb. 8, 1864.

Gen. S. Cooper, Adjutant-General:

The forces of the enemy which crossed at Morton's Ford, on Saturday, were driven to the river under cover of their guns. That evening, or during the night, they recrossed to the north bank, but remained in position yesterday. This morning they have disappeared. They left seventeen dead and forty-six prisoners in our hands. Our loss was four killed and twenty wounded. The guard at the ford, a Lieutenant and twenty-five men, while bravely resisting the passage of the enemy, were captured. The enemy's cavalry, which appeared at Barnett's on Saturday, retired across Robinson's River on Sunday evening.

R. E. LEE, General Commanding.

Orange Court House, Feb. 8, 1864.

One Captain and thirty-nine privates, captured at Barnett's Ford by Gen. Early's division, were brought in this morning.

The enemy crossed at Barnett's Ford early this morning, but soon recrossed again.

From the Richmond Examiner, Feb. 9.

The movement of the enemy appears to have been no more important than a feint or reconnoissance. Recent Northern papers mention that Meade is still in Philadelphia, but it is altogether improbable that the enemy's force in Northern Virginia contemplates any serious advance in the absence of their commander.

The surgeon at the Seabrook's Receiving Hospital was notified by telegraph yesterday afternoon to prepare for the reception of a number of wounded in the skirmish which occurred on the Rapidan on Saturday. The number of wounded was stated to be between thirty and forty, all very slightly wounded.

CHARLESTON.

EFFECT OF GILLMORE'S FIRE.

A two hundred-pounder Parrott shell exploded last week in Charleston in the blacksmith's shop connected with one of the founderies, wounding six of the boys employed in the shop—one mortally, one seriously and four slightly. The alarm bell in the steeple of the First Station partook of the general alarm on Sunday, and rang itself hoarse, cracking its throat in the attempt to call out the militia. Its tongue could hardly articulate a sound yesterday, and the bell will be of little future service in ringing the hours or sounding fire "alarms." "So much for over-exertion."

From the Wilmington (N. C.) Journal,

Gradually the constant dropping of the enemy's shot and shell is beginning to tell upon the lower portion of the city of Charleston. Their chief spite, from what we can learn, appears to have been turned against Broad-street; at least, its effects are most apparent in that vicinity. The street is considerably encumbered with bricks and other debris knocked out by the enemy's projectiles. It will take much time and money to repair the damage.

AFFAIRS IN INDIANA.

Correspondence of the New-York Times:

Indianapolis, Ind., Thursday, Feb. 4, 1864.

I owe you a letter and would pay my debt, but everything in this Hoosier Commonwealth is so lively that a man has no time to write of passing events. A fresh excitement expels old ones, and every other interest is absorbed in that of prosecuting this war to a speedy triumph. Here and there the Copperhead papers show their venom, and in Brown and Martin Counties the K. G. Cs. have reorganized to fight enlistments, now that there is a chance of some of them being drafted. They are a slippery tribe. I give you one choice specimen. Judge Perkins, of the Supreme Court, was first a war man; then a defiant peace man; then, two months ago, for the "extermination of the rebels." Now, within a week, he has officially turned a complete somersault by deciding, upon appeal, that the "military authorities have no right to establish police regulations at a military post in time of war, to prohibit the sale of liquor to soldiers, and that this war is simply a legitimate struggle on the part of sovereign States (the South) to separate themselves, in the exercise of a legitimate and undoubted choice, from the United States, as the Colonies broke off from the mother country." The Cincinnati Enquirer lauds this decision, and pronounces it a sublime effort of the bench to emancipate the people from a detestable tyranny. The fact is, that these sham Democrats dare not have any fixed policy. Their fight is to get into office, and their greatest fear is that the Administration will end the war the present year. It seems, sometimes, as if the people ought not to tolerate such infamous sheets as the New-York News, the Chicago Times, and the Cincinnati Enquirer; but the people have too much sense to be fooled by their absurdities. Enough on that subject.

We have veteran regiments, as you know, perhaps If things go on as at present, we shall have nothing else, except the eleven new regiments now in camp. Every day we hear of three or four new ones recruiting, and hardly a day passes without the return of one or more. We have a rough, hoosier way of receiving the noble fellows.

The fire-bell gives a specific alarm as a train approaches. The ladies at once bear their arms full of delicacies to the grand dining-hall of the Soldiers' Home, four hundred feet in length, and prepare the tables. As the train enters the depot, a salute is fired, and every flag-staff in the city displays the Stars and Stripes, while the main streets are promptly adorned with countless flags and other decorations. Then follows a procession and a grand ovation at the State-House, and a welcome from Gov. Morton. I don't know now it is, but it seems that he remembers every officer and soldier that goes from Indiana, everything that he ever did, and all his gallant acts. His intense devotion to Indiana soldiers is like that of a father; it is so unflagging and so personal. You would be affected by the character of these welcomes, and the wild enthusiasm with which his sincere, heartfelt words are received. I tell you, that the pride he justly feels in their exploits, is only surpassed by his gratification in the general progress of the national cause. It is not Indiana regiments alone that are thus welcomed. A table is spread day and night, under the Governor's directions, with eight hundred plates, and no regiment goes through without an invitation to stop and dine with the Hoosiers. Already, New-York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Maryland, Rhode Island, New-Jersey, Vermont and Connecticut veterans have shared this hospitality. We shall keep it up. All are welcome. God bless the veterans, every man! and we are thankful for a Governor that loves to honor them, from whatever State they come.

The new call took us by surprise; but no matter. We already had nearly five new regiments of cavalry and as many of infantry in camp, and are enlisting and sending recruits to old regiments about as fast as veterans return. We should like to have a little drafting done in some districts, but we really feel like raising the new quota, as we have the others, without draft; for the honor of the State. But for that, we would bless a draft, and enforce it gladly. The Copperheads were all at once in favor of the last call, when they thought it was so easily filled. Now they are bitter, as they fear that, after all, there may possibly come a draft. You can't trust them. Don't try! We don't!

We think the war progresses. Nothing disturbs our confidence in the success of our arms. Do as well in the Empire State as we will do in Indiana, and the year 1864, which began with the second Proclamation of freedom, will end with a proclamation of peace. Then give us wise counsels, sound statesmen and patriotic heads to control the affairs of the nation, and its destiny will be ever onward and ever glorious.

MARION.

AFFAIRS IN UTAH.

Jason R. Luce paid the extreme penalty of the law at noon, yesterday. He struck down, with a knife, Samuel Bunton, of Oregon, in the main street of this city, on the 7th December, was tried before the Probate Court, found guilty of murder in the first degree, and, on the 22d of that month, was sentenced by Judge Elias Smith to be shot to death on the 12th instant.

The unhappy man met his death with a cool nerve. He evidently expected a mitigation of the extreme penalty; and when he found such expectation futile, he denounced those whom he considered his evil geniuses. He was rather a young man, and left a wife and five children. His last farewell with them is described as most affecting. He appeared sensible of the enormity of his crime, regretted the errors of his past course, wished the young men of the community to take warning by his fate and shun evil company which had been his ruin. He was shot at the Court-house in this city, before an invited few, canvas screens preventing the public from taking a view, to avoid gratification of a morbid curiosity, according to Mormon custom. The executioners, too, remained in the Court-house and shot through a window or doorway, to prevent, as far as possible, unpleasant allusions in the future.

After a very brief exposure in a rude state to the public, the body was given over to his relations, and to-day interred in the cemetery.

Till five or six years ago Luce was considered as decently conducted as the generality of young men. Since then evil company gave color to the idea that he was one of a fraternity who were reputed to have a rather reckless regard for life, and not the most distinct ideas of property. The fraternity has dwindled away of late years, having received several thinnings.

If I recollect rightly, this is the third judicial execution of white men in this city, and, I believe, territory. Names are needless here. The law of the territory directs that the Judge determine the mode of the death penalty—hanging, shooting or beheading—or he may allow the convict to choose. The first of the three executions was by hanging, under sentence by a United States District Court. The criminal was not offered his choice; but, in accordance with custom elsewhere, was sentenced as stated and paraded through the city in an open wagon to the place of execution—a very conspicuous one—outside the city, but in full view of the greater portion of it.

The other two executions were under sentence of the Probate Court. The prisoners were offered their choice of mode, but both declined to exercise it; whereupon the Judge, according to law, decided the mode, by shooting, that evidently being least repulsive to the ideas of the Utah people in regard to capital punishments—strangling being particularly objected to.

The extreme cold of last week—seven or eight degrees below zero at daybreak—has been succeeded by a "January thaw," with rain. Anxious horticulturists affirm their belief that the peach fruit buds have been fatally injured by the cold. I am inclined to believe otherwise, though not pretending to knowledge in the matter. The wish with me is father to the thought, or belief, for I certainly wish to eat peaches next Fall. Meantime, the mild weather is a pleasant thing for those who have small woodpiles, and such persons are plentiful in this city.

There is apparently a liberal stock of snow yet in store for this region.

Recent arrivals from Idaho bring the conflicting news that provisions are plentiful—no more needed; and also that they are very dear and scarce—prospects of a famine in the mines. The news, however, affects the market little. The poor people here, and those who have little stock of food on hand, are pretty much tired of the high prices and scarcity, and liberal blessings are bestowed upon the supposed causes of the rise, though nobody seems to anticipate any early decline in the figures. Flour may move more freely even if with no fall, provided the thaw permits the mills to run.

Among the current tourist visitants to this somewhat famous city, is the veritable Artemus Ward. Doubtless the notable showman will be able to pick up a thing or two from the Salt Lake curiosity shop, to enhance the interest of his unique exhibition. He might hire the theatre for a night or two and display a little, after the fashion of the First Napoleon, making his great marchings pay for themselves.

On Saturday, "The Stranger" and "Paddy Miles Boy," drew a moderate house. To-night. "The Hunchback" and "My Preservers" are presented.

The Legislature—Miscellaneous.

The sittings of the Legislature draw very near to a close. The Appropriation Bill is of general interest to all—of special interest to a few who hope to be helped by it. But that may pass, it is not a serious bone of contention, for the money will be voted some way, spent somehow, and somebody will receive it. There are two subjects, however, which Jew and Gentile, saint and sinner, now consider of more than ordinary importance for legislative action. These subjects are represented in the Legislature by a General Incorporation Bill and a bill concerning "mining claims." Now, all old miners, resident and incoming, have been anxiously, and perhaps impatiently expecting action in these matters, in accordance with precedent. The legislative body has looked upon them from its own peculiar point of view, and above all, done it very leisurely—no hurry at all; yet several animated talks have been indulged in about the "claims." Finally, the Mining Bill, patched up, mended and amended, gave way on Tuesday to a substitute, which, with rules suspended, passed both Houses in double quick time. The Vedette, which speaks with the Opposition, is somewhat puzzled with this sort of legislation; don't understand it, and evidently thinks turning, twisting and dodging among the fine arts. The bill is also objected to, as one intended to hinder, rather than aid the development of the mineralogical resources of the Territory.

The position of the two parties appears to be this—the Vedette and the miners and the "Gentiles" in general are great on the precious metals, think there are plenty of them in Utah, and wish them brought into sunlight "right straight," while the Legislature troubles little about the minerals, thinks if the glittering ores abound, as it is said, in the Territory, they will come forth to light "in the due time of the Lord," and evidently reckon more of acres than "feet," of cereals than ores; of the golden harvest of the meadows than that of the mountains—of agriculture than mining.

The Vedette and the miners, however, put the gold and the silver in the front rank as the supreme interest to which all others must succumb; and plainly hint that special and too restrictive legislation will be but a dead letter on the statute books. So there is just a chance of lively times and little "difficulties" between Mormon farmer and Gentile miner in the years approaching. The angry clouds may pass off, however, as they often do in this region, with threatening demonstration only. Compromise, too, is sometimes a great idea, particularly where disagreeing parties are mutually dependent.

Circumstances connected with the recent trial and execution of Luce have troubled some of the under currents. But it is difficult to speak of them in other than dark sentences. It is generally understood that the unhappy man, before death, made a confession or revelation, which touched the corns of certain persons not over tenderly. The confession has not come to the light, the receivers and holders evidently considering it not just the thing for the public eye; the contents, though, are hinted about in vague, ambiguous phrase.

On Tuesday, that nominal body, the Deseret State Legislature, met in the Council House in this city, organized, and adjourned till Saturday. What business there is for these solons to transact is rather a puzzler. Failure having followed all attempts of Utah to become a State, the continuance of the shadow without the substance is illustrative of Mormon tenacity, and of the peculiar ways of doing things in this Territory.

On Saturday the "Hunchback" was again played in the Theatre, and on Wednesday a full house convened to see the "Green Bushes," followed by the "Two Buzzards."

The weather is fine and not severe, the snow melting or evaporating daily, the streets "slushy" before midday. Under the snow, upland soil is in good condition for working.

Flour is not now advancing, for, though one lot stood in the street the other day, demanding twenty dollars per hundred, the exorbitance was simply jeered.

FROM NICARAGUA.

Correspondence of the Associated Press.

Grenada, Nicaragua, Wednesday, Jan. 13, 1864.

The moves on the political chess-board of this country are at times sublime We now have a rumor (which is seemingly well authenticated) that it is the intention of the President (Gen. Martinez) to resign the Presidency immediately after the adjournment of the Congress, which is expected to convene at Managua, (Capital of Nicaragua) on the 15th inst. His reasons for such a step are said to be caused by a constant and unremitting hostility to his Administration by influential parties in the Republic. The true friends of this State will regret that circumstances (if such there are) require the resignation of His Excellency, for it is obvious that there are few if any men in this Republic who are as capable of governing it as Gen. Martinez. He is personally a brave man, and undoubtedly a true friend to his country, and solicitous for its improvement and advancement.

The great staple, cotton, is beginning to be cultivated here, and it will doubtless surprise some of the wiseacres in the United States when it is known that no less than 4,000 bales of cotton were exported from one port of this Republic last year, almost all of which went to England. The English have been giving this matter attention. At the lowest estimate 15,000 bales will be exported this year, the bulk of which goes into the jaws of the British Lion. You may rely upon this as being true. With this people the cultivation of cotton is but an experiment, and, without doubt, will prove valuable. There are now eight cotton gins erected at Chinandega, fifteen miles from the port of Corinto, on the Pacific, others are being ordered, so you see the move is made in earnest.

We trust, in the event of a change of Administration here, that it will not inaugurate another revolution. Peace is what is now required to develop this country. With energy this can be made a garden.

The settlement of the vexed question between this Government and the Central American Transit Company may be considered certain when Congress meets. The company have now in this country some very efficient officers, among whom I may mention the new General Superintendent, Edward Hall, Esq., a gentleman of much experience and worth, lately your City. The success of this great interoceanic route is not doubted for a moment by those who like fair competition.

ANOTHER REPENTANT REBEL.

A Leading Alabaman Denounces Secession.

Hon. D. C. Humphreys, a prominent politician of Alabama, and a Presidential elector on the Douglas ticket in 1860, but afterwards a strong secessionist, has issued an elaborate address abandoning his errors. The following are extracts from the document, which is receiving a wide circulation:

"For near three years have the Confederate States been anxiously waiting the interposition of some foreign Power to put an end to the shedding of blood, and to the wild ruin and devastation all over the broad land. The power to appeal to is at hand. Let the people be heard. The inhabitants of the land are the sufferers. They want Government, civil authority. It is their right to be heard. For three years their voice has been stifled.

Upon what terms may the Union be restored? Just as it was, save the feature of African Slavery. It is evident that the South must make a material change upon the question before she can again live in peace with the world. Nations more formidable in all the elements of power than the Southern States have often been forced to yield to the pressure against them, and to change their policy. This great moral, religious and political question we should meet like men, as becomes a Christian people. We should meet it openly and boldly, and if the voice of Christendom is against us, yield to that voice as to the voice of God. We have undertaken to fight out of it, but it sticks the closer to us. We cannot shut ourselves up within the cotton States and defiantly proclaim to the world that our system is peculiar to ourselves and it must not be investigated. It was thought by many that we could be independent of the world, and that the world was dependant on us.

What now is the social condition of the South? Not a family to be found but mourns the loss of some inmate. Fiction never pictured what reality has disclosed. Fathers have been slain in battle. Sons have been sacrificed. Thousands of brave men have perished on the ground where some memorable battle has been fought, as if to try the skill of commanders in conducting the instruments of destruction.

It is time to put an end to the desolation of home, to the slaughter of kindred and the ruin of friends. The restoration of Government saves our honor as political communities, reconstructs social life, gives security to the person, reputation and property. There are those who affect disdain at the reconstruction of the Union, as though it would dishonor and soil forever the character of the Southern people. To reconstruct the Union is to reestablish law, order and constitutional authority. It is to reestablish society, with the safeguards and protections which once existed.

To justify revolution there must be a cause; and to justify its continuance after it has been begun, there must be an end to be attained. The Slavery agitation was the cause, and the preservation of the institution was the end sought to be attained. If the revolution is to prove the destruction of the very end proposed, then no object is to be arrived at, which will justify prolonging the struggle. Then the question naturally is, will the continuance of the struggle save the institution? Had the Southern States the power to resist the tide against them—or rather had the slave interest in the Southern States the power to do so, then the end proposed could be attained. This, then, is the point in controversy.

The Confederate States threw off the Government of the United States; and the United States are endeavoring to reëstablish the authority of the old Government over the territory of these States that have thus thrown off that authority. If the United State Government has the physical power to reinstate its authority everywhere that it once existed, of course it is the intention of those who control that power, to do so; and they intend to reëstablish it where they can. They have armed for that purpose, and the question again is, can the United States Government push forward its power over all the South?

Certain it is, that if the armed struggle continues, and the Federal power is pushed forward in the same ratio for eighteen months to come, that it has advanced since the war began, the whole labor system of the South will be unsystematized. The question may here naturally be asked, will the restoration of the United States Government restore the labor system of the South, and give it security? I believe it will. It will secure to the State the right to dispose of its labor system in the way and manner that shall accord with the circumstances surrounding us. We can't subsist without labor, nor can the labor system be changed all of a sudden without ruin. We can have no system of labor without government, and we can have no government so long as the war continues. And we can have no means of carrying on the war without labor. The authorities of the Confederate misrule could do nothing, and can do nothing, to regulate the finances without the basis of labor. This is what has ruined the finances of our country—the destruction of the labor; the war has destroyed the labor, and disunion brought the war. Remove the cause of the prostration, and we may yet have some prosperity. Can a patriot look calmly on and see the cause of a whole country's ruin, and make no effort to remove the cause? Mere fighting will not return us our laborers. We have fought gallantly. The world is satisfied with the chivalry and valor of our Southern people; but the law of physical force and the want of unanimity of action, are both against the cause of the Confederates. Can't the same physical power which has made its way from the Ohio to the Tennessee make its way further down, to the Gulf? We know that there is a wide difference between overrunning the country and subjugating it. But to destroy the labor system of the South it is only necessary that the Federal arms shall overrun the country. And what can the South do when the labor is taken away? It may be thought that the laborers cannot be taken from the country, but that thought is a delusion. The condition of the country has been growing worse every year of the war; and is the prospect of relief as good now as it was twelve months ago?"

NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

On Thursday night last the westward bound train on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad was captured ten miles west of Harper's Ferry, by a band of guerrilla robbers. The usual signal to stop the train was given, when the guerrillas surrounded it, and commenced a general robbery of the passengers, male and female. Greenbacks, jewelry, and other valuables were taken, and few of the passengers escaped without losing something. The object seemed to be entirely to obtain booty, as notwithstanding several Union officers and soldiers were on board, no prisoners were taken. It is reported that the passengers lost, altogether, not less than $30,000 in money and valuables. The engine and tender were run off the track, but the train was not injured. The robbers then left, and it is surmised that they were a party of plundering desperadoes from both sides.

A correspondent of the Boston Herald, writing from Charleston, under date of the 6th, says that all recent attempts to reinforce the worn-out garrison of Sumter have failed, because our guns completely command the whole harbor, and at night our calcium lights prevent the approach of the enemy, while every ten minutes a huge shell is dropped into the ruins. The same correspondent mentions an attempt by a rebel ram, accompanied by an infernal machine to proceed down the South Channel, for the purpose of destroying two of our vessels doing guard duty there. Before they got down, the infernal machine, a long, cigar-shaped thing, sunk, carrying down eight of her crew. The rebels have not tried to raise her. Deserters tell strong tales of the desperate condition of the rebels, and of their purpose to break the blockade.

A dispatch from Lake City, Florida, dated Feb. 8th., published in Richmond on the 9th, says that "eighteen vessels, gunboats and transports, are reported by the commanding officer at Camp Finnegan as having arrived at Jacksonville. The enemy, presumed to be in large force, have landed, and were last night reported as advancing."

The Memphis Bulletin publishes a card signed by three hundred of the best citizens of that city, addressed to the people of Tennessee, upon the subject of the reorganization of the State, and re-establishing relations with the National Government. It recommends immediate and unconditional emancipation as the best, truest policy, and only alternative, and calls upon all to support the same, by meeting at Memphis on the 22d instant.

CONGRESS.

In the Senate yesterday a report was received from the Secretary of War, giving a list of officers in Washington who, by reason of being stationed there, draw commutation for quarters and fuel. A memorial was received from the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, asking that the Government grant military aid in opening a new route to Idaho, through Central Minnesota, in order to draw out the gold now awaiting shipment. The Senate then took up the bill equalizing the pay of soldiers. An amendment was adopted, giving colored soldiers the same pay as white troops, after Jan. 1, 1864. The discussion continued, but without coming to a conclusion, the Senate adjourned.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

In the Senate, yesterday, notice was given of a bill to prohibit the sale of liquor on Sundays; for a railroad in Thirty-fourth-street, New-York; for the better protection of oysters planted in Harlem River. A communication was received from the Comptroller, announcing that the fund for State bounties to volunteers was exhausted.

In the Assembly a bill was reported legalizing Brooklyn Volunteer Bonds. The General Appropriation Bill, which was the special order, was considered in Committee of the whole, and a very spirited debate occurred on the item appropriating $200,000 for the expenses of the militia. A bill was introduced for a railroad in Desbrosses and other streets in New-York.

GENERAL NEWS.

The Washington Republican is authorized to announce that the telegraphic reports, published under date of Cincinnati, Feb. 11th, to the effect that parties arriving at Nashville from Knoxville, on the 10th instant, report that Cumberland Gap is cut off, and that nearly all that part of East Tennessee is in possession of the rebels, is not confirmed by any information in the possession of the Government, but, on the contrary, there is good reason to believe that the report is not true. If such news had been received at Knoxville on the 9th or 10th instant, it would certainly have been communicated to the Government before this time.

The Cincinnati Commercial, of Feb. 9, says: "We have authentic occasion for saying that under no circumstances will Gen. GRANT be a candidate for the Presidency, or permit his name to come before a national convention for such purpose, if his positive declination of the honor will prevent it; and, so far as his opinions are known, he is in favor of the nomination and re-election of Mr. LINCOLN."

A dispatch to the Chicago Tribune, dated Memphis, Feb. 7, states that on the 6th inst., Gen. P. G. T. BEAUREGARD, through his agent, paid his United States tax, on property in that city, amounting to over one hundred dollars. This clearly indicates that, even if he has faith in the establishment of a Southern Confederacy, he has no hopes that Tennessee will constitute a portion thereof.

GEO. W. CURTIS lectured to an immense audience in Philadelphia, on Friday evening. The Bulletin says that part of his lecture which drew forth the most spontaneous, universal and repeated applause, was his defence of the policy of President LINCOLN.

PETER F. BURKE, one of the July rioters, has been arrested at Washington by a detective, upon a requisition from the Governor of this State, and put in the Central Guard-house for safe keeping.

The Sixty-seventh Ohio Regiment, Col. VORIS, arrived here on Friday night, on board the steamer Fulton, from Port Royal. This regiment has reënlisted, and returns home on furlough. It numbers three hundred and sixty-six men.

The Supervisors' Recruiting Committee obtains at the present time, including reënlisted veterans, an average of 200 men each day—more than a regiment of soldiers in a week, if the men were put into the ranks together.

The receipts for internal revenue of the Sixth District of Massachusetts for the six months ending Jan. 1, 1864, were $698,391 83, an average of $92,470 45 per month.

Maj. HUNT, in whose behalf Senator HALE interested himself, and who has been on trial by a court-martial at Fortress Monroe for some time, has been honorably acquitted.

Rev. Dr. PARSONS COOKE, formerly editor of the Puritan Recorder, died at his residence in Lynn, Mass., on Feb. 12, aged 64 years.

A twenty-inch gun, which will throw a solid shot weighing half a ton, has been successfully cast at Fort Pitt Foundry, Pittsburgh. It weighs 85 tons.

The Nashville Union learns that Gen W. G. HARDING, President of the famous Military Board of the rebel Governor of Tennessee, ISHAM G. HARRIS, has taken the oath of amnesty.

Flour and Wheat were dull and heavy on Saturday. An active inquiry prevailed for Corn at advanced prices, as also for Hay, Oats, Hops, and the principal kinds of Provisions at buoyant rates. Fish, Fruit, Groceries, Spices, Wool, Tallow, Tobacco, and Whisky were in fair request. The freight market was inactive, with 478 vessels of all classes in port.

The Omens of Ruin.

Among the many despairing proceedings of the Congress at Richmond, which betoken the approaching dissolution of the rebel Government and the so-called Confederacy—the gigantic impressment, (driving every able-bodied man into the army,) the forcible seizure of the crops, the summary repudiation of a debt of hundreds of millions, the public confession that they cannot feed an army of two hundred thousand men—the most striking to our mind is the bill passed on Feb. 1, entitled "an act to increase the efficiency of the army by the employment of free negroes and slaves in certain capacities." By this act the Secretary of War is empowered to impress all male free negroes between the ages of 18 and 50, and to employ or impress all male negro slaves, to a number not exceeding 20,000, for any military service he may select. The wages and rations for both are to be the same with those of white soldiers; in the latter class, the wages are to be paid to the masters. In case of the death, or capture, or escape of the slave, the masters are to be compensated.

There seems to have been an animated discussion over the bill—honorable members objecting to the equality of payment of the negroes, precisely as they do here, on the ground of its equalizing the negro and white. But the practical sense of the Southern Congress showed them that if they would have good black soldiers or teamsters, they must treat them, at least in appearance, equally well with the white.

A proposition to exempt the free negro farmer was summarily put down, as, in fact, placing the black farmer above the white. There seems to have been a good deal of nervousness among members as to the part the free negroes would play in the Southern military service. Mr. SMITH, of Alabama, described them as "inimical to our cause," and being usually able to read, write and draw, he thought they might convey to the enemy very important information about their own fortifications. So with the teamsters—he feared their clogging the march of a whole army "by devices."

Mr. ELLIOTT, of Kentucky, naively replied: "Does the gentleman suppose free negroes more inimical to our cause than slaves?" Mr. SMITH "had never heard that free negroes had done anything good to our cause." Mr. CHAMBLISS, of Virginia, was "quite as willing to trust free negroes as slaves in our army."

The bill passed, of course, for the rebel Congress is now controlled by the votes of members from the States occupied by Union armies, who have nothing to lose, and will follow to the last the slightest beck of the desperate and able men at the head of affairs.

Nothing but the utmost desperation could induce even the leaders to adopt this measure. It is, in fact, a bill to emancipate and arm 20,000 slaves, and to organize and arm all the male free mulattoes and free negroes of the South. The latter class—as has been shown in New-Orleans—are a most dangerous one to the rebel Government. They sometimes own property. They hate the class of white masters. They have a large mingling of white blood among them, and are therefore quick, intelligent and revengeful. Their sympathies are now and must always be with the North.

With a proper infusion of them into the rebel army, we should need no scouting and spy-system. Everything that was of value in regard to the enemy's movements and plans would be speedily unfolded to us. Many a rebel wagon train, as the member from Alabama suggested, would be clogged and mired if these men were the teamsters. Then as to the slaves, the act means the confiscation at once of some forty millions of property, belonging exclusively to the ruling class. For no planter in his senses will suppose that he could ever use as a slave on a plantation again a man who had defended him in many a battle with musket and bayonet. And even if he be only a teamster, the life in the camps is not the one to prepare a man for being a slave. Furthermore, the chances of war, and the possibilities of escape, would inevitably carry off the greater proportion of this movable property.

To us at the North, no proposition of the rebel Congress could be more gratifying. To know that twenty thousand of the firmest friends of the Union are organized in the Southern army; that the dangerous lesson has been given to the slaves that they must be armed for the masters' sake; that a score of thousands of indispensable laborers are withdrawn from Southern production, and as many free men made, is something which would encourage us if our fortunes were at a much lower ebb.

We do not, however, expect any immediate practical results from this bill. Military organization can for a considerable time prevent our deriving much benefit even from the arming of 20,000 slaves by their rebel masters. But we consider this as only the beginning of a new policy among the rebels. It is valuable to us, as an indication of the desperation which precedes utter and remediless ruin.

Prosperity of the Country and its Inventive Talent.

Mr. T. MILNOR GIBSON, in his recent speech on American affairs, expressed himself as much surprised at one fact which he stated to his audiences, viz., that though this country was engaged in a gigantic war, which taxed all its resources, and though we had put into the field an army of a million men, who were of course so many withdrawn from peaceful avocations, and in the main from agricultural pursuits, yet the production of wheat in the country actually increased from 169,000,000 bushels in 1862 to over 191,000,000 bushels in 1863. The statement was felt to be so damaging by the secession sympathizers in England, that their Ajax, Mr. SPENCE, took it up at the meeting of the Society for the Establishment of Southern Independence. He admitted the fact as stated, but claimed that other products had diminished, and that this fact alone gave an erroneous impression.

But there can be no doubt of the main fact that the prosperity and resources of this country have shown no such diminution or languishing as the rebels and their friends desired. Hence their uneasiness. They had hoped and believed that such war as we have carried on would have, in far less than three years, ruined the mercantile interests, broken the bankers, and beggared the whole people; that manufactures would have ceased, and commerce been destroyed, and agriculture been reduced to nothing; and that the shadow of want would have been long ere this gradually darkening over every man's door. And the fact that even in one item the production of the country should have increased, was too remarkable and too dangerous a fact for their cause to be allowed to pass without an effort to break its force.

Mr. GIBSON undertook to account for this remarkable fact in part by the increase of immigration, and no doubt correctly. The stout hands which have come into our land from across the seas have helped to fill up the gaps which the war has made among our laboring classes. Something no doubt too is due to the zeal of our people. Our farmers have been willing to labor harder, to sow and reap more land, because by so doing they could help the country's cause. Another reason for it has been the increased use of machinery. The necessity for laborers has driven our farmers more and more to save labor; and the reaping, threshing and mowing machines have been in more general demand, and have done more work than ever before.

We can hardly estimate our indebtedness to these labor-saving servants. How could the grain on the broad plains of the Western States by possibility have been gathered in without them, when so many stout arms, that in former times wielded the cradle and the flail, now wield the bayonet or the sabre? Nor has this assistance been felt in the department of agriculture alone. What should we have done for arms, but for the inventions of previous years, which have enabled our manufactories to turn them out by the thousand where ancient processes would only have given them to us by the hundred? How could we have clothed the mighty host, which sprung to arms at the country's call, but for the sewing machine, whose rapid fingers speed unwearied by day and night along countless seams? Thus in all departments, in arming, in clothing, in feeding our soldiers, we must acknowledge our indebtedness to the inventor's brain. These mighty inventions which we have looked upon hitherto as means only of increasing the comforts and luxuries of life among us, have proved to be reservoirs of power which God had prepared for the nation in its struggle for its life.

But mighty as have been the results produced by the inventor's skill, the future will show "greater things than these." The inventive talent of the nation is now mainly turned toward the arts of war, and is winning great success in that direction. There have been more ideas evolved among our Northern people which will have a permanent influence upon the modes of warfare in future than the Crimean war brought out in England, Russia and France combined. But when the war is done and the people return again to the arts of peace, we look for an advance in the mechanic arts, as well as in the productiveness of the country, compared with which the past will be as nothing. The gaps which war has made in our numbers will speedily be filled up. The vast regions of the South and the Southwest, then thrown open for the first time to free labor, will call for and absorb all the laborers which we and Europe combined can furnish. In them our soldiers, who may find themselves somewhat unsettled by camp life and unfitted for our older and quieter life of the North, will find ample scope for all their energies, and the nation, homogeneous at last, will set out upon a course of prosperity which will enable us not only to bear the debt of the war, as Mr. GIBSON said he believed we should be able to do from our "growing population and vast means," but to wipe it out altogether, and that speedily.

STAFF OFFICERS AND THEIR DUTIES.—The duties and responsibilities of staff officers present a question of marked interest; and we subjoin the following note which comes to hand touching one point of the question:

In Gurowski's Diary, the author, with more prejudice than judgment, endeavors to prove that our defeats can be traced to the want of a proper staff and Chief of Staff. This, if true, would doubtless be an excellent means of shifting the responsibility of defeats from the shoulders of Generals and transfer it to their subordinates. But every soldier, and every one conversant with military affairs, knows that staff officers have no command, and only transmit the orders of their superiors. The position of a staff officer is one of honor and of danger, but is not in the line of promotion; nor yet, in case the General is killed, does the command devolve on the Chief of Staff, as the author of the Diary supposes. To read this book, one would imagine that NAPOLEON, and other commanders, deserved no credit for their victories, but that the Chief of Staff was the responsible man—the brains and nerves of the army, and, in fact, the person to whom alone should victory or defeat be credited. SOLDIER.

Without entering into the merits of the views which the writer makes the subject of his criticism, we do not think the point he himself makes is well taken. Staff officers do not merely "transmit the orders of their superiors." They very frequently write orders, under the general direction of the Commander, and they still more frequently convey information on which orders are formed. It is easy to see that blunders in either of these functions may entail disasters on the army; and of this the battle of Chickamauga furnishes, perhaps, the most remarkable example on record. A staff officer reported to Gen. ROSECRANS that one of the divisions of the right wing, (WOOD's,) which was merely thrown back a little en echelon was out of line. Under the impression produced by this false information of a stupid blunderhead of an Aid, General ROSECRANS directed an order to be written which would remedy the defect; but by the fatal ignorance of the staff officer who wrote the order, it was so worded as to make the very gap in the line which Gen. ROSECRANS, under the false impression that such a gap already existed, was laboring to fill up. The rebels promptly leaped through the opening made by the withdrawal of WOOD's division, and the whole wing was broken and routed right and left. Nothing more is needed to prove the importance of sound judgment, coolness and military intelligence in staff officers. The writer critic zed by "Soldier" may exaggerate the duties and responsibilities of the staff, but the critic himself errs equally on the other side in unduly depreciating them.

Centralization in France.

The French Opposition have a truly Herculean task before them. Not only have they to win back liberty for the press, and to establish the right of the people to freedom of election, not only have they to restore independence to the tribunals, and to substitute responsible for arbitrary government, but, if they would not leave their work incomplete, they must destroy, root and branch, that all-pervading system of centralization which is everywhere paralyzing the energies of their nation and unfitting it for the appreciation and enjoyment of political blessings. Centralization is that all-absorbing power of the State, which, under pretence of excessive concern for the welfare of the individual, strips him of all municipal responsibility, and reduces him to the condition of an automaton, who lives and moves and has his being merely as the sovereign authority directs.

It is hardly possible for a stay-at-home American to conceive the extent to which this emasculating and demoralizing system is carried in France. When LOUIS XIV. exclaimed, "L'etat, c'est moi," the French Provincial Parliaments were in existence; and, though the monarchy was a despotism, the people possessed some few corporate privileges. But now, in the middle of the nineteenth century, and under the democratic imperialism of the Buonapartes, how stands the matter? Why that there is not a departmental or municipal prefect in France who is not a nominee of the Executive; that there is not a mayor in the empire, from the forty mayors of the metropolis to the humblest mayor of the obscurest commune, who is not a nominee of the Executive; that there is not a village pedagogue from the English Channel to the Pyrennees who is not a nominee of the executive. But the Imperial Government is not content with the appointment of local magistrates and elementary schoolmasters. It also undertakes to provide the proprietors of newspapers with editors, collegiate institutions with professors, charitable and scientific bodies with presidents—nay, it even denies to the Free Masons the choice of their Grand Master, and to the Society of Arts the selection of those students who are sent to Rome at the public cost to perfect themselves in painting, sculpture and architecture. So universally prevalent, in fact, is the French centralization system, that if the party of progress in the Legislature cannot succeed in effecting some modification of it, the individual in France will soon be reduced to a state of utter helplessness and imbecility, in which freedom of the press, freedom of election, and all other kinds of freedom will be of little use to him. While, however, there are men among her representatives who are fully sensible of the pernicious operation of this system on the national mind, and sufficiently daring to denounce it, the future of France need not be despaired of. One of the most outspoken and fearless of these, M. PELLETAN, who, it will be recollected, was elected for the Ninth District of the Seine, despite the opposition of the forty Parisian mayors, ventured during the debate on the Address, to call the attention of the Chamber to the evils of centralization, and to propose a change in the system. He recommended that the nomination of the presidents of departmental councils should be restored to said councils, and that urban and communal mayors should be henceforward chosen by the respective municipalities. Mr. PELLETAN'S recommendation was not of course adopted by the chamber, but there were, nevertheless, over sixty of its members who had the manliness to vote for it; and when we recollect that more than one-half of these must have been habitual government supporters, we don't think the honorable gentleman has much reason to despond because his first effort proved a failure, Even if the majority had sustained him, they could not have insured him victory. In the present circumstances of France it is not within the province of the Corps Legislatif to contrain the Emperor to curtail his prerogatives. The most they could have ventured on would have been to submit the suggestion to their Sovereign, with the conviction that it would be hardly honored with a moment's consideration. The consequences of M. PELLETAN'S defeat are not then likely to be of a very serious nature. He must, in fact, calculate on experiencing many such ere his exertions are crowned with triumph. But let him persevere, let him keep the question continually before the Chamber, let him persist in exposing the abuses of the system, and by-and-by the attention of the masses will be turned to it, their interest therein will be aroused, they will descend into the arena to battle for their municipal rights, and a voice from the ballot-box will reach the Tuileries which even a Bonaparte will not be so reckless as to disregard.

The Prussian Imbroglio.

The Prussian imbroglio, though not likely to be attended with such tragic consequences as that about the Duchies, is yet little less complicated, and difficult of solution. Since WILLIAM and VON BISMARK deserted from the ranks of the Confederation, the breach between them and the Lower Chamber has been widening. The deputies have passed a series of resolutions denouncing the conduct of the Government, as traitorous to Germany—have refused to sanction the loan demanded by it to meet the expenses of the war—and have proclaimed that they will resist the Austro-Prussian "execution" by every means in their power. The latter avowal, however, on the part of the Chamber, was hardly necessary, for its rejection of the Minister's scheme was ample evidence of its determination to embarrass him as far as possible. But the Premier has resolved not to be incommoded by the action of the House, if he can at all avoid it. He declared to the committee that, should the deputies refuse the loan, he would get the money wherever he could, and if he can only find capitalists who will run the risk of advancing the cash to the Government, he is the very man that will not scruple to take it. Meanwhile, the ministerialists, in order to retaliate on their adversaries, have commenced a regular series of attacks on the Constitution, and the privileges of the members.

Baron VON DER HEYDT, has introduced a bill to suppress article Eighty, of the Constitution, which guarantees to the deputies their traveling expenses, and salaries, and to so modify article Seventy-eight, as to render it unlawful for any deputy holding office under the Crown to enter the Chamber without having obtained leave of absence from the chief of the department. The preamble to this bill alleges that its object is to promote order and subordination in the Executive bureaux, and to render the representatives of the people more independent; but who can doubt that its real object is to decimate the ranks of the Opposition, by excluding poor men and liberal functionaries from the Assembly?

The von der Heydt projet, however, merely aims a blow at an obnoxious party and individual foes, but that of the Finance Minister, RODELSCHWINGH, takes a higher flight, and strikes at that privilege of the Chamber which gives it power and vitality, and without which it would be only an incumbrance and incubus to the State. Article 99 of the Constitution provides for the annual establishment of the Budget, and declares that it must be fixed every year by law. Now, the Prussian Chancellor of the Exchequer has proposed to get rid of this inconvenient clause, and to substitute therefor one which would leave the last legally established Budget in force as often and as long as the King and the two branches of the Diet could not come to an agreement about the national revenue and expenditure. In a word, this model financier would fain obviate the difficulty pending between his Sovereign and the deputies, by constitutionalizing the past and prospective illegalities of the Government, and reducing the Lower Chamber to a condition of perfect helplessness in the presence of the King. Of course, the Executive has failed to carry either of these iniquitous measures through the House, and are therefore in very bad temper—so much so in fact that they stoop to the practice of the most contemptible devices in order to indulge their anti-democratic spleen. Here is a specimen of the lengths to which they go for this unworthy purpose. Some time past the Chamber appointed a commission to inquire into certain irregularities which occurred at the last elections. Hardly, however, had the commission entered on its labors, when a circular appeared from the Prussian Postmaster-General, instructing his subordinates to pay no attention to the interrogatories that might be addressed to them by said commission, but to forward all their communications to headquarters. This ukase was, of course, issued by command of the Cabinet, yet it would be rather difficult to find the clause in the Prussian Constitution which authorizes the Executive to obstruct the popular branch of the Diet in the discharge of its duties. But n'importe. Thwarting the investigation of the Chamber into electioneering frauds is doubtless just as legitimate as raising loans and taxes without its concurrence.

From the repeated assaults of Ministers, indeed, on the Constitution, and from their studied disregard of the privileges of the Lower Chamber, it is evident that the King has made up his mind to resort once more to his old coup, and to govern as hitherto, on the sic volo sic jubeo principle—nay, it is almost certain that the blow has been already struck, and the Diet dispersed.

This annual farce of summoning a parliament in order that he may have the pleasure of a regular set-to with it, and the honor of flooring it periodically, has become, in truth, a favorite pastime of WILLIAM'S, and threatens to be interminable if the Prussian people don't manifest a little of that enthusiasm and bellicosity in behalf of their own liberties which they so freely lavish on the Teutons of Schleswig-Holstein—if they don't proclaim in thunder-tones to the tyrant that, if he would continue to reign over Prussia, he must respect the provisions of the constitution, the privileges of the Chambers and the rights of the nation.

—Gen. MEAGHER addressed the Montgomery Association, in Boston, on Feb. 9, upon the career of Gen. CONCORAN.

FROM CHARLESTON.

Destruction of the Blockade-Runner Peosto—Failure of Attempts to Reinforce the Garrison of Sumter—Mortality in the Fort—Sinking of a Rebel Infernal Machine—Escape of Deserters, and their Story.

BOSTON, Saturday, Feb. 13.

The correspondent of the Boston Herald, writing from the fleet off Charleston, describes the destruction of the blockade-runner as follows:

OFF CHARLESTON, Tuesday, Feb. 2.

"Very early this morning some daring Englishman made a bold attempt, just before daybreak and during a fog, to run the blockade. He succeeded in getting in as far as the mouth of the harbor, where he was run ashore by trying to avoid the shells from our batteries, which were flying in every direction. The fog soon cleared up, and there was the blockade-runner hard and fast on the beach. She was a splendid looking side-wheel steamer, with two smoke stacks and rakish masts. Forts Wagner and Gregg, aided by two monitors, at once commenced to shell her, and by noon she was a complete wreck. A two hundred-pounder Parrot from Fort Wagner cut her nearly in two. Besides the shelling of the steamer, the city of Charleston, James Island, and Forts Johnson and Moultrie have received a tremendous cannonading."

The same correspondent, under date of Feb. 3, says:

"The rebels have tried several times lately to reinforce the almost worn-out garrison in the ruins of Fort Sumter, but have failed. It cannot be done by daylight as our guns have full range of the harbor all round. All night our calcium lights are kept lighted and bear not only upon Fort Sumter, but upon all the harbor and the city, so that it is impossible for a boat or a steamer to go near the ruins. In addition to this the small remnant of a garrison in the ruins are treated every ten or fifteen minutes to a heavy powerful Parrott shell from sunset till daylight. Most of the men in Sumter are negro slaves, and we know that some twenty or thirty of them are killed daily.

The night before last, it being somewhat hazy, one of the rebel rams in company with a torpedo-boat, a cigar-shaped, infernal machine, left Mount Pleasant and proceeded down the creek in the rear of Sullivan's Island, for the purpose of going out to make an attempt to destroy the gunboats Housatonic and Nipsic, which were doing guard duty that night in the south channel near Beach Inlet. When the ram and infernal machine had got ready to make a dash out of the inlet, it was found that the machine was in a sinking condition. She was then turned back into the inlet where she now lies sunk. She went down carrying with her eight of her crew. This mishap put an end to the attempt to destroy our vessels. This is the third infernal machine the rebels have lost.

A few days ago a squad of ten rebel soldiers, including a sergeant, escaped to our lines. They say that "starvation" stares them in the face in Charleston; that all civil laws are at an end in the place, and that military rules have full sway over the civil authorities; that they are becoming "desperate," and that every means in their power will be resorted to to force the blockade here. They must have assistance or starve. They report that the city is badly damaged from the effect of GILLMORE'S constant bombardment, which is still going on.

FEBRUARY 6.—Yesterday and to-day the bombardment has been kept up. It is calculated that at least a shell is sent into the city about every ten minutes when our fire is directed against the same.

The rebels have not yet attempted to raise the infernal machine sunk in Beach Inlet.

The weather has been very rough for the last forty-eight hours.

THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

HEADQUARTERS THIRD BRIGADE, THIRD DIVISION, SECOND CORPS, FEB. 8, 1864.

I have the honor to report that on Saturday, 6th inst., at 7 o'clock, I marched my command in the direction of Morton's Ford, in accordance with orders received about three hours previous to that time. I arrived at the headquarters of the cavalry reserve within half of a mile of the Ford, at 10 o'clock, A.M., and halted. At 10:35 I received orders to cross the river, which I succeeded in doing, and pushed the enemy back about half a mile, and then under orders not to press the enemy too hard, but to skirmish with him if he appeared so disposed, I halted my advance and made my disposition to hold the favorable ground which I had taken. In a short time the enemy began to concentrate troops in my immediate front, and to advance a stronger line of skirmishers. I communicated this fact to Corps Headquarters, through the signal officer, and asked for reinforcements; at 3:10 P. M., Cols. CARROLL and POWERS reported to me by order of Gen. HAYS, and I massed their brigades, (First and Second of the Third Division,) under cover from the enemy's fire, and in a position whence they could be readily deployed to the right or left, as circumstances might require. The enemy kept up a vigorous fire of small arms during the day, and, at intervals, a heavy artillery fire from a battery in position on his left. Fresh troops were arriving continuously, and in great haste. At 5:20 P. M. the enemy opened with a heavy fire from his batteries, and shortly after rear advanced and attacked vigorously our right and right centre; but it was futile, as, under the personal supervision of the General commanding the division, the enemy was met and repulsed at all points.

At 7:50 P. M I was ordered to hold myself ready to recross the river, which I did at 11:30. All the troops behaved well. I am satisfied with the Third Brigade. It will do its duty, and never disgrace the Second Corps.

The passage of the river under the enemy's fire, I consider as worthy of special notice, and I specially mention the good conduct and gallant bearing of my Adjutant-General, Capt. ROBT. S. SEABURY, who was the first to cross the river at the head of the 300 picked skirmishers, and to drive the enemy back from the rifle pits, capturing twenty-seven men and two officers.

My loss was two officers wounded, and three men killed and thirty-three wounded; which is remarkably light under the circumstances, and I believe that the enemy suffered much more severely.

The Thirty-ninth New-York Volunteers, Lieut.-Col. HUGHES, the One Hundred and Eleventh New-York Volunteers, Col. LUCE, the One Hundred and Twenth-fifth New-York Volunteers, Col. CRANDELL, and the One Hundred and Twenty-sixth New-York Volunteers, Col. BULL, were handled by their Commanders with skill and judgment, and behaved splendidly. I am indebted to Capt. JOSEPH HYDE and Lieut. P. C. ROGERS, of my staff, for their prompt and intelligent conveyance of my orders to different portions of the line.

I am, Sir, with great respect, your obd't serv't,
JOSHUA T. OWEN, Brig.-Gen. Vols.
Lieut. JOHN S. SULLIVAN, A. A. A. G.

A SUCCESSFUL SCOUT.

Fifty Rebels Killed and Sixty-three Taken Prisoners.

From the Nashville Union, Feb. 10.

Some eight or ten days ago a part of the command of Gen. PAYNE, (cavalry,) left Gallatin on a scouting expedition through counties bordering on Kentucky. About the same time Col. W. B. STOKES' regiment of cavalry left this place to coöperate with them, and, going by way of Alexandria, visited White, Putnam, and Overton counties. The Gallatin expedition would start the game and drive it down upon their comrades from Nashville. PAYNE'S men succeeded in killing thirty-three, and capturing sixty-three rebel guerrillas. Amongst the prisoners was Col. THOS. B. MURRAY, of Warren County, a politician of some note, who was on the Breckinridge electoral ticket. He was conveyed with other prisoners to Gallatin. Col. STOKES'S Cavalry killed seventeen rebels; but took no prisoners. Amongst the killed was Capt. JAMES DAVIS, well known in this city, a steamboat man, who has commanded different packets on the Cumberland River. He had on his person a brace of revolvers, $3,000 in Confederate money, and a copy of an oath of allegiance to the Federal Government, which he had taken, certified by STANLEY MATTHEWS, formerly Provost-Marshal of this post. He might have been taken alive had he halted when so commanded. But to the command he replied: "You had better find out who you tell to halt," and attempted to draw a pistol. A command to fire followed, and he fell pierced by seven balls.

The daring villain CHAMP FERGUSON was closely pressed by some of STOKES' men, but he made his escape.

It is mentioned as a singular fact that none of the prisoners or killed were armed with guns. All had revolvers, some of them as many as three. Thus armed they could pass through the country and be citizens or guerrillas as they might choose.

The Federal scouts lost not a man during the expedition.

The splendid regiment of Col. STOKES is now at Alexandria. It numbers between 1,200 and 1,500 men.

Violation of the Revenue Laws.

BOSTON, Saturday, Feb. 13.

Twenty cases of cigars, libeled in the United States District Court for violating the revenue laws, were sold at auction to-day. "El Designio" brands ranged from $62 50 to $123 per thousand. Other choice lots brought from $90 to $102. The average amount per thousand for the whole lot is about $93 77.

From San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Saturday, Feb. 13.

Sailed, steamer Constitution, for Panama, with 100 passengers and $606,000 in treasure for England, and $500,000 for New-York.

Colorado Territory.

Within the past three or four months the attention of New-York and Boston capitalists has been directed to the gold mines of Colorado Territory, and large investments of money and machinery have been made for the purpose of developing the vast mineral resources of that region. So little is known of the wealth of the mountain ranges of Colorado, and the manifold advantages of that region, that I have thought a brief article on the subject might not be out of place in the columns of the TIMES.

It is only five years since public attention was attracted to what is known as Colorado Terrritory. For nearly two years after the discovery of gold in the valleys east of the mountains, the miners met with indifferent success, and a general feeling of disappointment prevailed. But the persevering efforts of "prospecting" parties at length revealed the existence of numerous gold-bearing quartz veins in the mountains, and a fresh impulse was given to mining enterprises. Stamp-mills and other mining machinery were brought rapidly into use; and from a yearly yield of only $4,000 in gold in 1859, the product has steadily increased to a yield of $15,000,000 in 1863. All this, too, in the face of serious troubles and annoyances growing out of the inexperience of the pioneers, who were only apprentices in the business of gold-mining, and who could not for a long time discover a sure and economical process for saving the gold known to exist in the ores.

But at length science and experiment have overcome this difficulty, and the recent reports from Colorado give warrant to the belief that the yield of 1864 will not be less than $30,000,000. In the opinion of Prof. KENT, of the New-York Assay Office, "Colorado will in five years rival California."

The climate of Colorado is mild and salubrious, and the record of mortality since its settlement presents a most favorable exhibit of its healthfulness. In an agricultural point of view our Territory possesses many advantages not common to mineral regions. The great plains and parks are covered with a tarifty natural growth of grass, and all the valleys and bottom-lands are susceptible of a high and profitable state of cultivation. Already numerous farms and ranches are scattered through the Territory, and this branch of industry has been prosecuted with most remarkable results. The pastoral resources of Colorado are second to no other country in the world.

The progress already made in the settlement of Colorado, is indeed marvelous. The city of Denver, situated on the Platte River, near the base of the mountains, contains to-day some seven thousand souls, and boasts of several fine churches, two theatres, and a university. Substantial brick blocks line the principal street, and there is an air of prosperity and enterprise apparent there which would do credit to any twenty-years old city of the Western States. Other towns and settlements of the Territory are making rapid strides in size and population, and although this region is nearly seven hundred miles west of the Missouri River, it presents to-day all the characteristics and phases of the flourishing portions of the Western States. But the undeveloped and unsettled portions of Colorado offer great inducements for new settlers, and labor is at present much needed in the mining regions. Wages in the mines are from $3 to $5 per day. Everything necessary for the comfortable subsistence of a large population can easily be obtained. There is room and demand for one hundred thousand more people than are now in the Territory, and opportunities for rapid and sure accumulation of wealth are open there, which exist in no other mining country in the world.

An office has been opened in this City, at No. 5 Bowling-green, for the purpose of promoting an increased emigration to Colorado. Publications will soon be issued setting forth the numerous advantages of this region, and giving full information to intending emigrants. Will not the TIMES aid in this work by giving this article a place in its columns?

Respectfully, &c. EDWARD BLISS.

Lotteries at Fairs.

In a late issue of your excellent paper there appeared several letters sharply reproving the holding of lotteries at charitable fairs, and making fierce onslaught, in anticipation, on the raffles contemplated in the great coming effort.

At our last great fair, "The Ladies' Union Bazaar," I had the honor of acting as one of the supplementary managers. One evening a gentleman addressed a lady friend, who was standing at the table I served, as follows:

"Really, Madam, these raffles are a great comfort."

"In what way?" she inquired.

"Why, they have saved me from a world of annoyance; I came here this evening to spend the sum of $20, which mite I considered as my just proportion to this noble charity, according to my means. I did not want a single thing. To my surprise and pleasure, I found at least twenty charming ladies of my acquaintance, selling at twenty different tables, and received a friendly beckoning from all directions. I glanced around, and felt my face sensibly elongating. Good gracious! I inwardly ejaculated; there don't seem to be a single article on these splendidly furnished tables worth less than $10 or $20. What the mischief shall I do? My hopes of spending a pleasant evening, as well as my money, flew to the moon; and in a frightful ill-humor, I approached the table nearest, determined to take the first thing that came to hand, pay for it, and leave the place, resigning myself, with what philosophy I might, to being ignominiously 'cut' by my other nineteen acquaintances.

But a voice of ravishing melody darted like a sunbeam through this dismal gloom, and poured balm into my stricken heart, uttering these magical words: "Take a chance, Mr. BIENFAISANT; only a dollar."

"To the rescue!" I cried, joyfully, pulling out my money; and, after a few moments' brilliant chat—for my delight made me incredibly witty—I visited all my lovely acquaintances in turn, and "took a chance."

What the half of these chances were for, I have not the slightest idea. I only know that I have given the money I intended, and kept my friends; and you will find mine to be the experience of thousands of others.

I had listened to this rigmarole with amused attention. Hitherto I had been savagely "down" on raffling, though wickedly selling tickets if any one wished to buy; but this was "putting things" in such a new and most plausible light, that I own myself halting between two opinions.

The clergymen who have written against the practice, are very much in the right and a very little in the wrong. For instance: I will admit that children, who in this connection are also fools, should never be permitted to gamble. If you call it so; but grown folks, who are supposed to have discretion and sense, and who, also, in this connection, we will assume not to be fools, need not rush desperately off with a dice-box in one hand and a suricidal dagger in the other, to lose money and life at the faro-table because they have won a big doll or a plum cake at a fair—need they?

I am perfectly and unpleasantly aware that some people come to fairs determined to have the worth of their money. The "mean critters" ignore the fact that this is not the point, but to give what they can afford to the charity, without thinking or caring of personal return, is the point.

Since the "Union Bazaar Fair," I have spent all my fair money in chances. I never won anything but once, and I assure you I was horribly sorry for it—it seemed like taking back my charity.

I do not presume to predict, but if raffling is to be excluded on the coming occasion, Mr. BIENFAISANT, and thousand like him, will find business out of town during the holding of the Metropolitan Fair.

EX-MANAGER.

Gen. Butler at New-Orleans.

NEW-YORK, Friday, Feb. 12, 1864.

In the issue of the World of the 12th inst. I noticed an article styled "Our Prisoners and Gen. Butler." In the article the writer alludes to the infamous rebel taunt of the "Tyrant of New-Orleans," as applied to Gen. BUTLER, and assumes the responsibility of the charge that the General made himself infamous in the sight of Christendom, in order that he might torment and insult unarmed women who had wounded his self-love. I am happy to say that the good sense and true patriotism of the American public renders any apology for the course of Gen. BUTLER in the instance alluded to unnecessary, if not superfluous; and it would be a cause of astonishment to me to learn that any other than a rank Secessionist or a Northern sympathizer with the rebellion, would allow himself to reiterate charges now so well known to have originated in rebel prejudices and hatred. But as the writer of the article has allowed himself the liberty of reproducing the slanders of a period long past, I would like to inquire whether he writes from personal knowledge or from mere rumor, or malicious reports, that he has formed his opinion. All officers and soldiers, and Union men and women present during Gen. BUTLER's reign in New-Orleans, ignore all tyranny in his administration of affairs in that city, and uphold him in everything he did, though it was the oft-repeated wish that he had ruled with a stronger arm. It is true the General sent two women to Ship Island. In this he was right, and had he sent more, all lovers of good order would have been better pleased? Is this the "torment" to which the writer alludes. If so, and he is himself a husband, father, son or brother, he may see in it the torment justly due to the already condemned criminals. I suppose the writer of the article, in speaking of Gen. BUTLER as insulting unarmed women, refers to his order to the men under his command to treat such characters as "women of the town." Can a "lady" offer an insult to a person? Can any female do so without affixing to herself the character of infamy? Having been present in New-Orleans at the period mentioned, and being in a position to know the facts in the case, I can affirm that no woman, no matter how bitter her secession feelings might have been, if she behaved herself as a lady, would never have received an insult from any one who was in any way connected or accountable to the United States Government. Some people did not like this order. The General knew his meaning, and no right-minded man's brains were so muddled as to be unable to understand it as it was meant. All acted accordingly, and did not ask our friends at home or abroad whether they liked it or not. What does the writer mean by unarmed women? Does he mean they were without dirk or pistol in their own hands, or that they were without husbands to protect them? I can assure him, both of the women sent to Ship Island had husbands or fathers, and if they had thought this ill treatment, they knew their remedy was in a respectful representation of the facts to President LINCOLN. This they did not do, because they knew well that their wives or daughters had shamefully done wrong. What would the writer of the article think of a woman who could stand upon her balcony or door stoop and wave her handkerchief, hurrah and spit upon the funeral cortege of a Union officer or soldier as it passes? But now, in regard to our prisoners. The Government has honored itself and sustained its own dignity in giving Gen. BUTLER another command. He is the right man in the right place, and I sincerely hope the Government and the General will stand firm in the steps they have taken and make the rebels recognize Gen. BUTLER as an officer before a prisoner should be exchanged. Were I a prisoner in the hands of the rebels, I for one would submit to the harsh treatment and short rations of Castle Thunder and Libby Prison, and die there rather than see my Government or Gen. BUTLER budge one inch from the step they have taken. I greatly mistake if this is not the universal sentiment of our officers and soldiers who are prisoners.

I remain, very respectfully, your obd't serv't.

How to Raise the Quota.

The great success which many of the interior counties of our State have met in "raising the quota" under the call for 300,000 men, would seem to indicate that they have a method in promoting enlistments which we do not possess. Their success cannot certainly result from a superfluity of material, for never was the cry for laborers more earnest, nor do they offer more tempting pecuniary inducements than are offered in this City, nor is the average of patriotism higher. What, then, is the secret of their success? The answer may be found, I think, in their manner of conducting the business of recruiting.

A few weeks ago I was in Rochester. The local papers were then congratulating the good people of the city that only about 200 more men were needed to complete the quota. In a very short time thereafter I learned that the work was done. And this was the way they did it:

At prominent points in the busiest part of the City the recruiting agents pitched their tents. Placards were displayed, giving full information in regard to the handsome bounties offered. Then bands of music were engaged, whose inspiring strains should complete the work begun by the alluring pecuniary inducements. This was good, so far. Money and music are strong attractions, the one to draw a crowd and the other to get recruits from it. But this was not all. Not content with bringing the crowd to the tents, the bands were paraded through the streets, with a small following of enlisted men, attracting attention wherever they went, and occasionally pausing for a patriotic speech and the reception of reeruits from the quickly gathered throngs. In this work the most prominent and most successful agent was the personage so long known as the "Razorstrop Man." He had been to the war himself as a private in one of the Rochester regiments—the One Hundred and Fortieth, I think—had been wounded at Gettysburgh, and been discharged as no longer able to do duty. But he certainly did not lack ability as a recruiting agent. With that peculiar oratory which has proved so valuable an aid in the sale of his "strop," he called upon the patriotic to fall into line for the defence of the Government and to save the City from a draft. The result of all this effort, as I have said, was the filling of the quota, nearly two months before the draft is to be made.

This method has the additional—and to the recruit, most, desirable—advantage of doing away with the dishonest middle-men who pocket so large a share of the bounty money. The machinery of "mammoth meetings," so unsuccessfully tried here, is not worth a "row of pins" in comparison with a band of music, discoursing soul-stirring airs, a short, good-humored, patriotic speech, and a squad of handsomely uniformed recruits. The first enthusiasm of the war is over. Few men go voluntarily to the recruiting officer to enlist. But by adopting the method so successfully pursued at Rochester, a great many would enlist whom all the persuasions of the "runner" could not move. Can it not be tried?

I read with much satisfaction the editorial in the TIMES recently, under the heading, "Is Secession Possible? Is the Confederacy a Nation?" as I have many other editorials in your paper to the same purport. In treating the doctrine as held by Mr. STEVENS, one point occurs to me that I have not seen made against it. It is this. Mr. STEVENS and the numerous class of distinguished men agreeing with him, assert this national character of the "Confederacy" as justifying the confiscation of the property of individuals. To my mind such a recognition of nationality completely destroys our right to make such confiscation. The right to confiscate the property of those men in arms against the Government, grows out of the fact that they owe allegiance to the Government of the United States and none other-and that their war is a treasonable rebellion against their own Government, and not that they are the citizens of another Government warring against us.

There is no rule better settled than that the private property, or land, of a public enemy, cannot be confiscated, while the private property of a traitor may be.

Even the laws of a conquered nation remain in force until new laws shall have been established by the conqueror.

If we expect to bring to punishment the men who instigated and are prosecuting this war, we must hold them individually responsible as citizens and subjects of the Government of the United States. When we relinquish that, we relinquish the right to punish them as traitors by taking their lives or confiscating their property.

Confusion is created in some minds by the doctrine that belligerent nations have the right to confiscate the property of each other. This rule applies only to national property. If there be anything settled by the laws of nations, it is that property of private citizens on land is not thus subject to seizure and confication.

I believe it of vital importance to this nation that we maintain the integrity of the Union. Admit no right on the part of any man or body of men, by whatever organization it may be attempted, to impair their allegiance.

I do not believe you can render better service to the country than in combatting this doctrine of nationality of the "Confederacy." I saw the first spring of this doctrine; saw good men drifting into it imperceptibly to themselves, and tried in my feeble way to expose its fallacy, but the cry of infidelity to my party was raised against me, and that is pretty sure to counteract argument and impair influence.

I am truly yours,

Jury Duty in New-York.

An intolerable nuisance is the jury duty of this City and a matter which calls for reform. I am sure that I speak the sentiment of many of our citizens in this respect.

My name has been in the jury box for years, and I find myself summoned as regularly as the year comes around to perform this duty. It cannot be accounted for on any fair principle that, out of a million of inhabitants, any one person should be called upon, year after year, to perform this most irksome (because so constant) duty. There is no good reason why he should be called upon more than once or twice in a lifetime were the duty properly assigned.

After a name has been once drawn and service given, such name should be thrown out and a new one substituted for it. Or again, if, instead of clinging to a man two, three or four weeks on a stretch, he could be released after serving a shorter time—say, two or three days—there would be something human in such a state of things.

There is another feature in the case worthy of notice. If men will wrangle in law, they should pay the cost of it. There is no justice in taking my time from me, which is money, (there being no military necessity,) without fair compensation. The lawyer has his pay, why should not the juryman? Why should he be compelled, day after day, to listen to the petty quarrels of Tom, Dick and Harry at 12½ cents a head.

In my judgment there would be less causes tried in court, and more money saved to the contestants, if the parties to the trial had to pay the jurymen proper fees, than under the present system.

I am told that large amounts of money are paid yearly by those who are drawn, to buy off from service. Can you tell me where that money goes to? If into the pockets of any corrupt set of men, it is at the expense of my time, for if all served who were drawn, certainly my chances of serving would be lessened.

Mr. Editor, this is an evil that should be remedied, and an outraged community call upon those officials who have to do with this matter, to withdraw from the jury-box all names which have been in there for one or more years, and substitute others for them, that this intolerable nuisance may not bear so heavily upon the few, but may be shared and lightened by the many. A JURYMAN.

NEW-YORK, Feb. 9, 1864.

The Speed of the Sloop-of-War Iroquois.

BALTIMORE, MD., Tuesday, Jan. 12, 1864.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In a recent letter to the press, I notice that Mr. DICKERSON, in speaking of the speed of the new sloops-of-war, takes occasion to mention the U. S. steamer Iroquois in such a manner as to give the impression that she is one of the fastest, if not the fastest, U. S. naval vessel afloat.

Now, as I have been for the past year and still am the Chief Engineer of that ship, I cannot let those exaggerated assertions of Mr. DICKERSON, pass without refutation, by giving you my opinion in regard to the relative speed of the two classes of vessels, based on actual trial; as otherwise, when the actual facts become known, you might think I was not doing as well with the ship as I ought.

The Iroquois, since I have been attached to her, has run in company with the Monongahela, under the following circumstances:

The Iroquois left Fortress Monroe, Feb. 4, 1863, at 9 A. M., some ten minutes ahead of the Monongahela, and at 5 P. M. the latter vessel had passed her, beating the Iroquois at least ten miles in eight hours' steaming. Steam pressure, 20 pounds per square inch, cutting off at 14 inches out of 28 inch stroke. Number of revolutions, 68 per minute. My opinion is, that the speed of the Iroquois has been very much over-estimated by you and others, as well as by the Navy Department, as Capt. A. LUDLOW CASE, our former Commander, can tell you, for I have often heard him speak of it, and if I am not mistaken, he addressed a communication to that effect to the Department at Washington, last Winter.

The greatest speed attained by the Iroquois during the last year, under the most favorable circumstances, with steam and sail set, was 12 knots, and that for a comparatively short time and distance.

I have the rough leg of a former cruise in my possession, and am unable to find in it any record of a greater speed than that above-named with sail set.

I have no hesitation in saying, to the best of my belief and knowledge, that the Monongahela can steam at least from one to one and a half knots an hour faster than the Iroquois.

I am, Sir, very respectfully,

J. W. STORMS, Acting Chief Engineer U. S. N.

Obituary.

Died, at the Union Hotel, in Kansas City, Mo. on Saturday, Jan. 23, 1864, THOMAS R. HOWLAND, of Company F, Third Regiment Colorado Volunteers, aged 44 years, a native of New-York City. Mr. HOWLAND emigrated from New-York to the new Eldorado, then known as Pike's Peak, in 1859, and enlisted at Denver in 1863, in Capt. HOLLY'S Company, Third Regiment Colorado Volunteers, and was appointed the company's clerk. They were ordered, via the Arkansas route, to Kansas, Mo. The deceased accompanied his command in their long and memorable march, crossing the snowy range through fifteen feet of snow, traveling on foot, a great part of the time on half rations, eight hundred miles in thirty-eight days. During this extraordinary journey, in the coldest weather ever known in this latitude, the thermometer had often fallen to twenty degrees below zero.

The deceased, although reared in affluence, and unaccustomed to exposure, and although, like many others of his companions, with limbs frosted and constant suffering, toiled on, enduring with uncomplaining fortitude, discharging all the duties of a soldier with unflagging resolution, winning the esteem and admiration of his officers and fellows. On his arrival his physical system gave way, and he died after ten days of intense suffering, which baffled the skill of the best medical advice. An only sister, who had voluntarily abandoned a life of ease and refinement in the Metropolis to follow the fortunes of her beloved brother in the wilds of the Rocky Mountains, still refused to forsake him when he enlisted in the grand army of the Union, but with sublime moral heroism followed him, at her own expense, in all his journeys, twice crossing the snowy ranges and cheerfully encountering with him all the discomforts, privations, and perils incident to such a trip, by such a route, at such a season of the year, hundreds of miles without timber, and many days without fuel or water, solely to be with him and to minister to his necessities, and still lavish upon him, in his last illness, all the tenderness of the most self-sacrificing and noble devotion.

His remains were followed to their last resting-place by the military and a large concourse of sympathizing citizens, and deposited, by the kindness of ROBERT R. DUNBAR, Esq., in his private lot at the cemetery, with all the honors of war. Requiescat in pace. H.

Hoyt's Hiawatha Hair Restorative.

A CHALLENGE TO TEST.

There are many preparations in the market advertised to restore faded and gray hair. People seeing the advertisements are unable to decide which is preferable, and using one or two, and failing to derive the expected benefits, conclude that they are all humbugs. That it may be known which can be relied upon, the undersigned, proprietors of propose that some well-known persons, to be agreed upon, disinterested and of unquestioned integrity, designate one person, whose hair has become gray, to the proprietor of each preparation, to restore it. Each proprietor to use nothing but his own preparation, and the person to use nothing else while the test is making. The certificate of the result to be published in all the principal papers of the country at the expense of the unsuccessful competitors.

COUNTRY RESIDENCES.

FOR SALE.

CASTLEWOOD—A first-class country place, situated on Mountain-av., in Llewellyn Park, at Orange, New-Jersey. The house is built of rough stone, under the direction of Alexander J. Davis, architect.

The architectural style of the house is castleated domestic gothic, irregular in plan, built in the most substantial manner with stone, lined with brick, and covered with slate and metal. The timbered floors, dressed to show construction, ornament the ceilings, are deafened throughout, and the whole pile, including the coach-house and stable, may be considered fireproof. The masonry is palisagie, that is, jointed in rhomboid form, and is of the trap rock, gray stone, cropping out of the ridges of the neighboring mountains. It is the decomposed trap mingled with the vegetable decomposition of ages, that renders the soil of this region so prolific, and so well adapted to the growth of trees; the variety, luxuriance and beauty of which surpass most places so near the City. This circumstance, and the planting of rare and curious trees, and flowering shrubs, in addition to the indigenous vegetation, renders the domain of Castlewood, and the contiguous sites in the park, a region of more than ordinary interest to lovers of natural history, of landscapes and rural beauty.

The entrance hall, at which we arrive by a fine carriage road, is very commodious. Stairs, wholly of oak, ascending and descending, are upon the left of a door opening to the principal drawing-room, which has a bay and other windows looking west, north and east. Before you is a saloon, circular in form, connecting with the east front. The domestic apartments are to the right of the hall, and occupy the south wing.

Private stairs and a small boudoir separate the family parlor from a nursery and bed-room. And connect the entrance road with the basement, and covered way to the stables, beyond a laundry, well-room and cloister. A spacious kitchen, several steps above the ground level on three sides, communicates with the laundry, fuel-room and store and cellar rooms, a pantry, sub-hall and dining-room—the latter under the saloon, also circular in form, and opening upon a terrace-walk, leading to the garden on the one hand, which is well stocked with the choicest varieties of all kinds of fruit, and the grove and ramble on the other. The sub-basement contains the furnace and its accessories, ice and coal vaults.

The upper floor contains four bed-rooms, beside a rotunda and tower observatory. The rotunda is adapted for a museum or music-room, library, picture gallery and billiards. It has a sky-light, oriel and other windows. It is the finest room in the mansion.

Five acres of land are offered for sale, with this house, together with a right to the use of Llewellen Park, which is a tract of 500 acres of land, beautifully situated on the eastern slope of Eagle Ridge, (Orange Mountain,) with a surface finely diversified, embracing deep ravines, bold, rocky cliffs, brooks of the purest spring water, picturesque old oaks, beeches and tulips, and a noble forest of the native overgreen and deciduous trees.

It is laid out and embellished with drives, walks, &c., in the modern natural style of landscape gardening, and 50 acres, known as the "Ramble," have been deeded in trust for the exclusive use and enjoyment of the purchasers of land lying within the park.

The rest of the tract of land, containing about 500 ACRES,
has been divided into Villa Sites, of from ONE TO TEN ACRES EACH.

It was selected with special reference to the wants of citizens doing business in the City of New-York, and yet wishing accessible, retired, and healthful homes in the country, but may be considered equally attractive to all citizens of the United States who contemplate being in this neighborhood. Sloping to the southeast, the best exposure for health, cultivation, and protection from the winds of Winter, it is favorably situated to catch the sea breezes which prevail in Summer.

The whole tract abounds in pure, soft, spring water.

It is believed that no spot within 20 miles of New-York is in all respects so healthy as the side of this mountain. It is almost the only locality so near the city where there is no fever and ague.

Purchasers of sites, desiring to build of stone, can obtain the material on the premises free of charge.

The privacy of the Park, and of all the sites, is secured by lodges, and gate-keepers at the entrances. The main entrances are on the valley road, one mile from North Orange Railroad Station. As we ascend along the Park avenues—seven miles of which are completed—Newark, New-York, and their Bays; Brooklyn, Staten Island, and the Narrows are all taken at a glance. Upon reaching the top of the mountain, 700 feet above the level of the sea, a landscape more than 100 miles in extent, spans the horizon. Cultivated fields and country seats, villages, town and cities, ponds, rivers and bays, with the Newesink Hills at the south; Nyack Mountain, Haverstraw Peak and the Highlands toward the north, with Long Island and the ocean in the east, all lie revealed to the eye. This natural panorama is acknowledged by all to be one of the finest in America.

LLEWELLYN PARK is less than one hour from New-York City via Morris and Essex Railroad, ten trains per day each way, foot of Barclay-st. or Christopher-st., and via New-Jersey Railroad and Orange and Newark horse railroad, foot of Courtland-st., twenty trips each way daily.

For ease of access, beauty and variety of scenery, for healthfulness of climate, for the intelligence and moral order of its population, in short, for all those considerations which combine to render a region attractive as a family residence, it is believed that the vicinity of Orange, especially the mountainous side, possesses advantages not surpassed, if equaled, by any other place in the vicinity of New-York.

For maps, terms and particulars, as well as cards of admission, Apply to the proprietor,

FOR $2,000,000.

SUBSCRIPTION BOOKS OPENED WITH Messrs. SCHUCHARDT & GEBHARD, Bankers, No. 21 Nassau-st., New-York.

The Chicago and Great Eastern Railway Company now offer for sale one million one hundred thousand dollars of their first mortgage bonds, in sums of one thousand dollars each, maturing in thirty years, principal and interest payable at the rate of Seven per cent. per annum, payable in the City of New-York, on the first days of April and October, in each year.

These bonds are secured by a first and only Mortgage on the property, income and franchises of the Railway Company, executed to Frederick Schuchardt and Henry Morgan, of the City of New-York, Trustees.

The remaining nine hundred thousand dollars of the Bonds are set apart and remain in the hands of the said Trustees, for the purpose of being exchanged for the indebtedness of the Chicago and Cincinnati Railroad Company, running from La Crosse to Logansport; this effected, the $2,000,000 will form a First and only Mortgage on a line of road 110 miles in length, extending from Chicago to Logansport, where it connects with the Cincinnati and Chicago Air-line Railroad, forming the shortest line by 40 miles, between Chicago and Cincinnati, and by 36 miles the shortest line between Louisville and Chicago.

It will also open, in connection with roads now in operation, entirely new and very direct lines from Chicago to New-York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and all Eastern cities. The distance between Chicago and New-York by this route being shorter than by either of the existing lines via Dunkirk or Buffalo.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE.

VOLUNTEERING AND THE PROSPECTIVE DRAFT.

Interesting Report of the County Volunteer Committee.

The following report was presented to the Board of Supervisors Tuesday, ordered to be printed in document form, and the ordinance attached thereto adopted:

The County Volunteer Committee, to whom was referred a resolution adopted by the Board of Supervisors at their meeting, held Feb. 2, requesting certain particulars as to the quota of the County of New-York, under the last call of the President for 500,000 men, would respectfully

REPORT.

That though the committee have made every effort to procure this information for the board, they have as yet been unsuccessful, in consequence of the authorities at Washington not having announced the quota of the State under the President's last call. As soon as your committee can ascertain the facts authoritatively, they will be communicated to your board without delay.

Your committee, however, have themselves made an estimate of what will be required of New-York County under the call of the President for 500,000 men. This estimate is based upon the quota allotted to New-York under the previous call for 300,000 men, and is made up entirely from the data which the operations of your committee have made available.

The estimate is annexed, marked Appendix A.

Your committee deem it proper to state, in this connection, that they are satisfied that the quota of the City of New-York, under the several calls of the President heretofore issued, have been fixed at altogether too large a figure.

It is well known that there is a numerous floating population constantly coming into and leaving the City, but who are assumed to belong to it because they happen to be in it at the time when the enrollment is made. This floating population probably amounts to 200,000 souls, who are counted as part of the City population, but who cannot be held liable to draft here.

And it follows that the residents proper of the County are compelled to furnish from their own number, in case of draft, men sufficient to supply the number added to our quota because of the presence of this floating population in the City.

Your committee have thought it proper to make due representations on this subject, in the proper quarter, and they shall make every effort on this and other equally reasonable grounds, to bring the quota of the County under the new call for troops down to the number only which, by right and justice, ought to be required of the County of New-York.

Your committee would also respectfully report, that the appropriation of $2,000,000 made on the 26th day of October, 1863, for the purpose of raising volunteers to supply the deficiency under the call of the 5th of January, and to make up the quota under any future call, will be soon expended, and an additional appropriation is needed at once. By the statement of the committee's operations annexed, both under the Substitute and Relief Ordinance, and the Ordinance to raise Substitute Soldiers, (marked Appendix B,) it will be seen at a glance, in what manner the money intrusted to your committee has been expended, and what number of men have thus far been raised.

Your committee are happy to state that while our former appropriations for this purpose have been illegal, and hence it has been difficult to obtain subscriptions for them, the Legislature has just passed an enactment by which not only all previous acts are legalized, but the matter of bounties is left somewhat discretionary with the local governments, so that the appropriation now proposed will be in accordance with law, and subscriptions thereto will, therefore, without doubt, be readily obtained.

The committee had hoped to add to this report a copy of this law, but as yet it has not been received.

Also annexed, and marked Appendix C, is the draft of an ordinance making a further appropriation of $2,000,000 for the procurement of volunteers.

Your committee, in conclusion, offer for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That this report be received, and, with the Appendix, be printed in document form.

Resolved, That the ordinance annexed, and marked Appendix C, be, and it is hereby, adopted.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

ORISON BLUNT,
WILLIAM M. TWEED,
ELIJAH F. PURDY,
WM. R. STEWART.

APPENDIX A.

STATEMENT OF MEN FURNISHED OR COMMUTED FOR BY THE COUNTY SUBSTITUTE AND RELIEF COMMITTEE, AND BY THE COUNTY VOLUNTEER COMMITTEE, UP TO AND INCLUDING FEBRUARY SIXTH, WITH ESTIMATE OF MEN LIKELY TO BE REQUIRED OF NEW-YORK, UNDER THE PRESIDENT'S CALL FOR FIVE HUNDRED THOUSAND MEN, WITH FIGURES AS TO PROBABILITY OF THE QUOTA BEING FILLED WITHOUT DRAFT

Men Demanded.

Under the call of the President for 300,000 men by the 5th January, the quota of New-York was fixed at	12,000 men.
There was added one-half to supply anticipated deficiency by reason of exemptions	6,000 men.
Total called for under 5th January call	18,000 men.
The call for 500,000 men being virtually a call for 200,000 men for 10th March, in addition to the call for 300,000 for the 5th of January, the additional number required of New-York to supply our quota of the 200,000 men, calculated on the basis of the quota on the call for 300,000 men will be	8,000 men.
Add one-half for deficiency 4,000 men.
Total likely to be called for under the 10th March call	12,000 men.
Total quota under the two calls	30,000 men.
Deduct from the above the men added to supply deficiencies, viz:	10,000 men.
The quota of New-York would be filled under the calls, if there should be raised by volunteering or draft	20,000 men.

Men Furnished.

Toward supplying these 20,000 men, the County Substitute and Relief Committee furnished substitutes for drafted men to the number of	1,855 men.
They paid commutation (which counted as men) for drafted men	102 men.
They relieved the families of drafted men, who elected to go to the war	4 men.
Total number of men furnished by Substitute and Relief Committee	1,961 men.
The County Volunteer Committee have paid of volunteers 4,693 men. Of men reënlisted in the field 1,189 men.
Total number of men furnished by County Volunteer Committee	5,882 men.
Total furnished by the County Substitute and Relief Committee and the County Volunteer Committee toward the quota under the call for 500,000 men	7,843 men.
Add to this the number estimated to have been obtained by the draft who were not relieved by the County.	2,500 men.
Estimated number of men raised up to Feb. 6, the date of this report, to be credited to the City of New-York, on the call for 500,000 men	10,343 men.
Your committee estimate that up to the 1st of March they will furnish an average of 150 men per day, including volunteers and reënlisted men, being for the twenty-five days remaining	3,750 men.
Making a grand total to be deducted from the estimated quota of 20,000 men under the President's call for 500,000 men	14,093 men.

General Result.

Estimated quota under call for 500,000 men	20,000 men.
Deduct volunteers, drafted men, &c.	14,093 men.
Deficiency to be supplied by draft if it be not delayed beyond March	5,907 men.
Add one-half for deficiency in case of draft	2,954 men.
Total in case of draft	8,861 men.

SEC. 5. For the money so borrowed, the Comptroller is hereby authorized to issue bonds of the County therefor, in the usual form, which shall be designated and known as the "Volunteer Bounty Fund Bonds," and the same shall be transferable at the pleasure of the holders thereof, either in person or by attorney, only upon the books of the County, at the office of the Comptroller, and certificates of such transfers shall be indorsed thereon by the Stock Clerk.

For the payment of the principal of said bonds, and the interest to accrue thereon, the faith of the County of New-York, and of the Board of Supervisors of said County, is hereby solemnly pledged, and the Comptroller is hereby authorized and required to redeem and cancel the same, from time to time, at or before their maturity.

THE CHATHAM-STREET SHOOTING AFFRAY.

Great Excitement Among the "Dead Rabbits."

THE ANTE-MORTEM EXAMINATION OF THE VICTIM.—HE REFUSES TO TESTIFY AGAINST HIS MURDERER.

Coroner NAUMANN yesterday afternoon impaneled a jury at the New-York Hospital, and proceeded to take the testimony in the case of MICHAEL PURCELL, who was shot on Friday, at No. 145 Chatham-street, by Mr. JOHN VALENTINE GEARY, as reported in the TIMES of yesterday. The following testimony was given:

Edward O'Brien testified that he resided at No. 9 Doyer-street, and that he was a partner in the curiosity show at No. 145 Chatham-street; on Thursday evening the wounded man (PURCELL) came to the above-named place, and threatened to break up the business unless we paid him $3 per day; at 11 o'clock yesterday he came there alone and smashed the table and other things, and assaulted the organ-player; Mr. John Valentine Geary was attacked by him, and Geary drew a revolver and shot Purcell; they were about twelve feet apart when the shot was fired; Purcell was shot after he had finished breaking the things; the latter had no knife, pistol or club; as soon as Purcell was shot he turned and ran down stairs; Mr. Geary left the room and witness followed him; witness left him, Geary, at the corner of Doyer-street and Bowery.

James Geary testified: I live at No. 15 Bowery; I am a showman; I witnessed the shooting of Purcell; between 11 and 12 o'clock I saw Purcell in the showroom in Chatham-street; the first thing I saw he was pushing the organ-player against a table, almost pushing him over; he then smashed the table, and knocked down a glass-case and everything else in the place; Geary then drew a revolver and shot Purcell instantly; I think he shot Purcell twice; Purcell then ran out, and that was the last I saw of him; Geary and Purcell were about ten feet apart when the shooting took place.

At the conclusion of the testimony, the jury rendered the following verdict: "We find that MICHAEL PURCELL came to his dangerous injuries by a pistol-shot at the hands of JOHN VALENTINE GEARY."

PURCELL has refused to make any complaint against the accused, and says that if he lives he will pay him in his own coin, and if he dies he desires the whole transaction to die with him.

Coroner NAUMANN then committed the accused to the Tombs to await the result of the injuries. PURCELL is about 23 years of age, and is a native of Ireland.

During the evening succeeding the shooting of PURCELL, another affray occurred in the Bowery growing out of the affair above recited, which at one time threatened very serious results. It appears that a great excitement was kept up all night throughout the Fourth and Sixth Wards, on account of the shooting affair in Chatham-street. The whole of the "Dead Rabbit" gang became highly exasperated on account of the fact that their leader had been shot and mortally wounded. At about 8 o'clock P. M. EUGENE GEARY, brother of the prisoner was passing along the Bowery, opposite Crook's Dining Saloon, when he was accosted by a friend of PURCELL, named JIM BARTLEY, who said, "How is your murdering brother?" GEARY replied, "I suppose he is locked up." DANIEL MCDERMOTT, a person well known to the police, then interfered and called GEARY a thief. BARTLEY passed a pistol to MCDERMOTT, when the latter challenged GEARY to a fight. The latter caught MCDERMOTT'S hand, and while he held it, drew a revolver from his pocket, placed the muzzle close to MCDERMOTT'S head and tried to fire. Fortunately the pistol missed fire, otherwise MCDERMOTT would have been a dead man. About this time Officer LYON, of the Tenth Precinct, came to the scene and put an end to further hostilities by taking the offenders to the station-house.

Extensive Fire on Water-street.

DAMAGE ABOUT $50,000—ATTEMPT TO BURN A LARGE BONDED WAREHOUSE.

About 1 o'clock yesterday morning, a fire was discovered in the warehouse of Messrs. MILLER & CONGER, No. 562 Water-street. The building was five stories in height, and from the first floor, where the fire originated, it speedily extended throughout the entire building. The loss on the latter is estimated at about $5,000. It was stored principally with coffee, sugar, molasses and cotton. The loss on goods is about $40,000; said to be fully insured in City companies. The police report that the fire originated from spontaneous combustion among some bales of cotton that were stored in the premises a few hours before the fire broke out.

Fire-Marshall BAKER yesterday made a thorough examination as to the origin, and it is his opinion that the cotton stowed there on Friday afternoon was set on fire previous to being brought there—i. e., that some one or more of the bales of cotton had fire put inside, and that the element was smouldering for several hours after the cotton had been placed in the storehouse. The cotton had just been received from New-Orleans, and consisted of nineteen bales.

The building adjoining, on Water-street, is a very extensive bonded warehouse, in which, according to Marshal BAKER'S report, there were stored goods to the amount of many millions of dollars. Messrs. A. T. STEWART & Co., and other well-known merchants have a great quantity of goods stored in this bonded warehouse, and the theory of the Fire Marshal is that instead of the fire being the result of spontaneous combustion, the cotton was fired for the purpose of burning the extensive warehouse adjoining, together with the contents. If this theory be correct it is one of the most daring attempts at incendiarism that has recently been attempted.

The Metropolitan Fair.

RAFFLING PROTESTED AGAINST.

The following protest has been handed us for publication:

The undersigned, ministers of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, feel bound solemnly to protest against the introduction of raffling at the Metropolitan Fair, proposed to be held in the City of New-York, in aid of the United States Sanitary Commission:

1. We protest against it because it is, in our opinion, contrary to the Word of God.

2. We protest against it, because it is absolutely contrary to the law of the State, which forbids, under pains and penalties, "the setting up or proposing any money, or things in action, to be raffled for, or the becoming interested in the distribution of any money, goods, or things in action, by lot or chance."

3. We protest against it, because the judgment of the civilized world, as expressed in the legislation of many Christian States, (our own in particular,) condemns, as immoral, all resort to the lot, or what is commonly called chance, for the purpose of raising money, or disposing of articles, not otherwise readily salable.

As the logical issues of these positions, and under the inevitable constraint of duty which they involve, we cannot take part, directly or indirectly, in an enterprise, which, however worthy in its ulterior objects, is publicly advertised to close in violation of both divine and human law, and in disregard of the judgment of mankind and of the interests of morality, which cannot fail to react powerfully in a tendency to debauch the public conscience and corrupt the public virtue.

Scientific.

POLYTECHNIC ASSOCIATION OF THE AMERICAN INSTITUTE.

The regular meeting was held on Thursday evening, Feb. 11, Prof. S. D. TILLMAN, Chairman, presiding, BENJ. GARVEY, Secretary.

The Chairman opened the meeting by reading a very interesting summary of scientific news. Under the head of Astronomy, he gave an account of the recent observations made by the leading astronomers on the companion of Sirius. Under the head of Medicine, he described a disease now prevalent amongst the inhabitants of Iceland, as well as amongst their cattle and dogs, and which is caused by an insect depositing its larvæ in the intestines; he also mentioned the discovery of infusoria in the blood of a man who died of typhoid fever, and called attention to a new application of electricity as a curative agent in asthma. Under the head of Photography, he mentioned a new developing agent lately introduced. He also called special attention to the meteorological observations called for by Sir WILLIAM HERSCHELL, to be made in all parts of the world, to determine the action of the moon in influencing the state of the weather at the full and quadrature.

New inventions and discoveries being called for, a member exhibited to the association WILMOTT'S patent Tompion for cannon and guns. This invention consists of two plates of metal, connected by a mill-headed screw, between which a mass of India rubber is placed, so that on turning the screw the plates are drawn together, the rubber being compressed, is forced out at the sides, completely filling the bore of the gun and fixing the Tompion firmly in it. It was regarded as a neat invention, though the principle of its action was not considered novel. The regular subject, "Tides and Waves, and Means of Utilizing their Power," was introduced by the Chairman, who read a paper on the theory of the tides, and traced the development of that theory by KEPLER and NEWTON, &c., through all its phases. He also commented upon the invaluable observations made by Prof. BACHE and officers of the United States Coast Survey to determine the laws of the tides as influenced by local causes all along our coast.

Mr. NORMAN WIARD gave an account of the Scudder, a vessel invented, some eight years ago by an Englishman. It was, as its name implies, a ship capable of pending in the middle as the bow or stern would be lifted by a wave, the object being to utilize the force obtained in that way for the propulsion of the vessel. He, the speaker, regarded this as an absurd idea, but mentioned it as connected with the subject of the evening. Among other modes of utilizing the force of waves, the employment of a cylinder and piston was examined to determine how many horse power could be obtained. Messrs. WARD, MILLER, ROWELL, DIBBEN, FISHER, GARVEY, and others remarked on this subject, the conclusion of all being that no power of economical value could be thus obtained.

Mr. FISHER gave an account of the Boston tide basins for obtaining water power by allowing one basin to all while the tide was making in, and the other to empty while the tide ebbed, thus keeping up a continual flow from one basin to the other. He also stated, that on the River Po, barges are moored in the stream and are fitted up as flour-mills, the power being obtained from the current, and suggested the employment of such floating mills to utilize the current produced by the tide.

Mr. FRANK DIBBEN stated that such mills were in common use, on most of the principle streams in the West.

Mr. WIARD drew a tide wheel which he built several years ago for the Niagara River. It feathered in going against the stream, and the float, when caught by the current, was held by a pin so as to receive the full force of the stream. It was, of course, on a vertical axis.

Dr. ROWELL made a drawing of a tide-wheel to be used in the sluice of a tide basin by a system of double gates; the water, whether entering or leaving the basin, was made to turn the wheel in one direction always.

It was stated that there are, in addition to the Boston mills, several others in Connecticut, on Staten Island, &c., which are worked by the power of the tides.

"Compressed Air as a Motive Power," being selected as the subject for discussion on Thursday evening next, on motion, the Association adjourned.

Junior Exhibition of the New-York Free Academy.

Cooper Institute was well filled, last evening, with an attentive and appreciative audience, more than half of whom were ladies, to witness the junior exhibition of the New-York Free Academy.

HORACE WEBSTER, LL.D., who on evening paper announced as deceased, presided over the meeting, looking as well, hearty and dignified as ever. The exercises were commenced by the overture to "Tancredi," performed by Dodworth's Band, under the direction of HARVEY B. DODWORTH; after which prayer was offered by Rev. HOWARD CROSBY, D. D.

The order of exercises comprised an oration—"Love of Country"—delivered by RUDOLPH W. SCHACK, which was very well received; an oration—"America and Poland"—delivered by WM. H. LANE, which was also very well received; an oration—"Future of the United States"—delivered by FRANCIS A. SAMPSON, which was decidedly good; an oration—"Egoism"—delivered by CHAS. H. SMITH, Jr., which was very well delivered; an oration—"Watchwords"—delivered by WM. H. VAN ARSDALE, also very good; an original poem—"Woman and the War"—by GEO. W. BIRDSEYE, which was excellent and received with great enthusiasm; an oration—"Aimless Men"—by JOHN H. PARSONS; an oration—"Mirabeau"—by JOHN S. HUNT; an oration—"National Greatness"—by J. SPENCER SMITH; and "Perfection in Government," by WM. C. WARNER.

From the commencement the exercises were well conducted, each orator receiving a good share of applause, until it came to the poem of "Women and the War," by GEORGE W. BIRDSEYE, here the applause was almost deafening. The poem was very well composed. Commencing with EVE in the Garden of Eden, the temptation and eating of the forbidden fruit, he passed on through the various ages, mentioning, in terms of praise, the great JOAN of Arc, paying a beautiful tribute of respect and esteem to FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE, he gradually came to the deserving women of the present day, their sacrifices at home, their anxiety for the dear ones in the army, their noble efforts in the hospitals, and the various other ways at home and abroad in which they had served their country faithfully, and so well performed their woman's mission to the soldier. His poem, alternately witty and serious, was frequently interrupted by applause, and at its close he was twice obliged to come forward upon the stage and acknowledge the compliment, before the exercises were allowed to proceed. The mention of the Emancipation Proclamation by J. SPENCER SMITH, also caused great applause, and the able manner in which he handled his subject was well appreciated. Mr. JOHN S. HUNT also was very good; his subject, however—"Mirabeau"—was not sufficiently modern to thoroughly entertain the audience—they evidently wanted matters of the present day. Mr. JOHN H. PARSONS was rather nervous at first, but a hearty round of applause soon brought him to himself, and a beautiful bouquet, doubtless thrown by some fair hand, completely restored his self-possession.

Among the distinguished gentlemen present were Prof. Davies, Judge Davies, Peter Cooper, Mr. Lane of the Bank of Commerce, Profs. Owen and Docherty of the Academy, and Messrs. Vance, Miller, Hasting, Hayes, Farr and Tuthill of the Board of Education.

During the exercises Brig.-Gen. GEO. C. STRONG appeared upon the stage, accompanied by Brig.-Gen. DAVIES, of Missouri. He was greeted with a round of applause, which he accepted in his usual smiling and good-humored manner.

The managers of the Female Assistance Society acknowledge with gratitude the receipt of the following donations, and once more appeal to their friends and a generous community for the funds necessary to relieve the wants of the sick poor; they are ever with us, and the high prices of food and fuel constrain many to apply for assistance who, under more favorable circumstances, would trust to their own resources:

The Late Firemen's Fight.

The Board of Fire Commissioners before whom was brought the matter of the fight at the late fire, corner of Spring and Mercer streets, between the members of Engine Companies numbers Fifty and Fifty-four, at which several persons were seriously injured, and one so badly shot as to require being taken to the Hospital, have decided to disband both companies; their apparatus have accordingly been taken from them, and the companies are no longer recognized as belonging to the New-York Fire Department. Fire Commissioners GORMAN, LAWRENCE and BONNELL, deserve great credit from both the public and the department for the prompt manner in which they punished these refractory members. So long as the volunteer department is conducted by such gentlemen, and they are supported as they now are by the members generally, it will continue to be a credit to this City.

GENERAL CITY NEWS.

GENEROUS OCULIST.—Mr. PETER GOUGLEMAN, oculist, doing business in Broadway, has been for some time furnishing poor soldiers, who have lost an eye in battle, with artificial ones, and so well has he counterfeited nature, that yesterday he was the object of a military visitation under the following circumstances: It appears that a soldier by the name of BAXTER, formerly of the First Massachusetts Artillery, who lost an eye at Fredericksburgh, called at the oculist's, and stated that he was poor, but, nevertheless, desirous of having a glass eye. Mr. GOUGLEMAN kindly furnished one, and the soldier went on his way contented. His journey, however, extended only to the Park Barracks, where he offered himself as a veteran for reënlistment. He passed the examination was sworn in, and received his bounty, $50 of which he sent to his mother in Massachusetts; the balance he deposited with the oculist. Before the glass-eyed recruit was fairly one of the rank and file, his former Captain, knowing of his defect, mentioned the matter to the recruiting officer, who singled BAXTER out, and accused him of dishonesty. BAXTER protested that he wanted to fight for his country again, and that nobody would know he had a glass eye if they would mind their own business. The recruiting officer, not satisfied with the argument, and imagining there was some complicity between the recruit and the oculist, waited on the doctor and threatened to arrest him if he did not produce the money BAXTER had deposited with him. This Mr. GOUGLEMAN was very willing to do, as the whole of the affair both as far as the eye was concerned and the money, was the result solely of a generous motive. BAXTER still retains his eye, the recruiting officer the money, and the oculist his good reputation.

LAUNCHES.—The new side-wheel steamer Excelsior, built at STACK'S yard, for the Messrs. LEARY, was launched yesterday, at 2 P. M. The engines are being constructed by JAMES MURPHY & Co. With the power to be put in her, and her perfect model, speed may be reasonably anticipated. She is 225 feet in length, with 48 feet beam over all, and is to be in running order in the month of May. The new steamship Fung-Shuey was also launched yesterday, from E. S. WHITLOCK'S yard, at Greenpoint. She is 210 feet in length, with 33 feet beam, and 17 feet from upper deck to keel, her between decks being 7 feet. Her engines and boiler were built by C. H. DELAMATER. She is intended for the Chinese waters.

Mr. CHIPMAN'S long experience and admirable character are well adapted to aid in promoting the successful administration of the immense parochial work of that large and flourishing church.

DROWNED.—A little girl, named JANE PARKER, an apple peddler, was accidentally drowned yesterday, at pier No. 13, North River. Deceased, at the time of the accident, was endeavoring to secure her basket, which had been thrown into the water by some boys. BRUTAL ASSAULT ON A POLICEMAN.—A gang of notoriously bad men made an attack on roundsman HESSIAN, of the Fifth Precinct, on Friday night, at the foot of Canal-street, near Spring, while that officer was in the discharge of his duty. They clubbed and stoned him in the most brutal manner. His injuries are very severe. Two of the rowdies, named MICHAEL BOYER and JOHN G. GARVIN, were arrested and committed for trial.

THE RE D'ITALIA.—The Italian iron-clad Re d'Italia went on a trial trip to the Lower Bay yesterday, and back to abreast of Eighteenth-street, North River, and then going over the same course again, her engines on one occasion making 51 revolutions, and showing a speed of 10½ and 11 knots. Her performance was highly satisfactory to her officers. She anchored in the North River on her return, and will proceed on another trial on Monday.

The members' ticket being defeated. Out of a list of members of over twelve hundred, but 154 took sufficient interest in the affairs of the Institute to vote.

THE WELSH AND THE FAIR.—A committee of Welsh citizens have issued an earnest, eloquent appeal to their countrymen to respond to the call of the Sanitary Commission. A special place will be assigned them, as there will be to other nationalities, and the signs are that they will make most liberal contributions.
